HISTORY POLYBIUS

The MEGALOPOLITAN:

CONTAINING

A General Account

TRANSACTIONS

OF THE

WORLD.

And Principally of the ROMAN PEOPLE.

During the First and Second Punick Wars, &c.

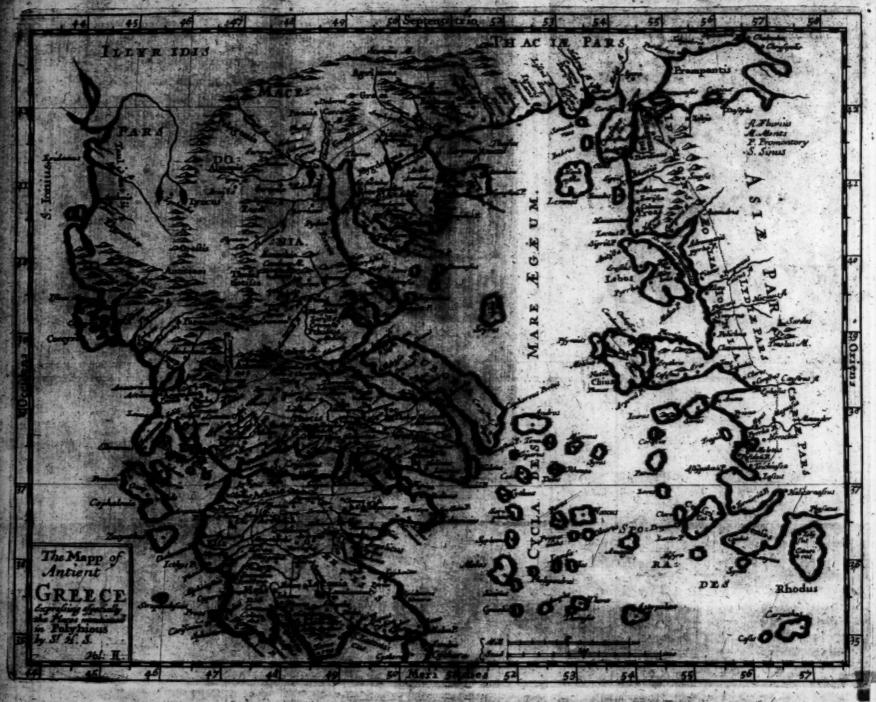

Translated by Sir H. S.

VOL. II. III.

The Second Edition.

LONDON,

Printed for Samuel Briscoe, at the Corner of Charles-Street, in Covent-Garden. M DC XC VIII.

U

POLYBIUS'S

General History

FTHE

NSACTIONS

OFTHE

ORL

Voi. II. Book IV.

Nour foregoing Boole we have related the Causes of the Second War that fell out between the Romans and Cartbaginians: We have deliver'd the Particulars of Hamibal's March, and Invation of Italy; and have recounted the Adventures of the two Avenies, to the time of the Battel that was lought on the Banks of the River Auften near Canna. Now the Occurrences of Greece. during the fame Period of time, shall be the Subject of our Pains. But we have thought it necessary to remind the Reader briefly : First. Of what hath been already observ'd of the Greeks in our Second Book, and principally of the Achaians. Inafmuch as it bath fo come to pass, that in the short space of ours and our Fathers Days, that Republick hath grown to a marvellous Greatness. For being founded by Tisamenes, one of the Sons of Orestes, we have observed that the Achaians were first govern'd by Kings, who sprang from him in a continu'd Line of Succession to the Reign of Ogyges: From whose time. the Supreme Power being translated to the People, became establish'd in an excellent form of Government: Which was afterward first broken and dissolv'd by the Kings of Macedon, when the Cities and Towns thereof became independent; each governing according to their own Rules, without any common Subjection to a Supreme General Tribunal, to which they might have recourfe. After this Revolution, we shew'd how they came to Unite and Incorporate into one Body; at what time it was that they came to this Resolution ; and who they were that gave the Occasion. In short, we have related by what Means and Counfels the Towns being drawn to Unite, the whole People of Pelaponnefus grew to have one common Appellation, and to be under one and the same Form of Common-wealth. After having treated in general of that Enterprize, and said something in particular touching the Actions of the Achaians, we pursu'd the Story down to the time, that Cleomenes King of the Lacedæmonians was despoil'd of his Government. Then we gave a brief Recapitulation of general Occurrences to the Death of Antigonus, Seleucus and Ptolemy, who all dy'd about the same time; having promis'd to begin our History at that Period, which gave an end to those Matters we have now last recited.

POLYBIUS's General History Vol. II.

In conclusion, I determin'd, that I could not any where better begin than from thence: First, In regard that there Aratus finisheth his Commentaries, so that by continuing the Thread of his Discourse, we shall thereby make the relation of the Greek Affairs, as far as we propole to touch them, all of a piece; and then it will come to pass, that the time succeeding, and that which shall compose our History, will be so united to the foregoing Period, that in part what shall be related of our own, and the Transactions of our Fathers Days, will be compriz'd in one Body. For as I have been a Witness to a good part of what shall be deliver'd, and compos'd the rest from the Relations of such as could yield me the like certain Testimony; fo I have shun'd the delivering of remoter POLYBIUS's General Fliftory Vol. II.

Occurrences, through the doubts to which they are subjected: And have thought nothing worthy of an Historian's Pen beyond that Period. Nor indeed can Truth farther fairly be shewn, nor Men consequently safely judge of any thing they hear otherwise deliver'd. A farther particular Motive we had for taking our beginning from thence was, that Fortune seem'd at that time to have made an universal Revolution, and given a new Face to the Affairs of the World.

Tho' Philip. Son of Demetrius, were vet a Child, nevertheless he foon came to fway the Scepter of Macedon, Achaus, who govern'd the Countries of Aha on this fide Mount Taxrus, did not only bear the Port of a Prince. but was in effect velled with Sovereign Authority. Antiochia, firnam'd the Great, a little before, fucceeded his Brother in the Kingdom of Syria; being then but very young. And Ariarathes took possession at the same time of the Kingdom of Cappadocia, which was deliver'd into his hands. About the fame time Ptolemy Philopater reduc'd Egypt to his Obedience. And a little after Lycureus became establish'd King of the Lacediemoniaus. The Carthoginians on that fide had newly made Hannibal their General, in order to those Attempts we have already recounted. So that the Government, as one may fay, of the World being put into new hands, it could not by the Law of Nature but beget new Count

Counsels, and produce new Things. The Romans then enter'd upon the War we have related. Antiochus and Ptolemy were soon in Hostility one against the other, for the Dominion of the Lower Syria: And the Achaians and Philip joyn'd in a War against the Lacedamonians, and those of Ætolia: The reasons of which War we shall now deliver.

The Ætolians had been long weary of Peace, which oblig'd them to live Honestly at their own Expence, who had been us'd heretofore to subsist on Spoil and Rapine. And whosoever bath lead that fort of Life. without prospect of other Prosit, than what ariseth by the Damage of another, after the manner of Savage Beafts, are without any fence of Friendship or Alliance; reckon all their Enemies they can prey on; and believe they have a right to any thing they can take away. Nevertheless, during the Life of Antigonus, the fear the Ætolians were under of the Lacedamonians, withheld them a while from Violence; but he was no fooner dead, and Philip, then very young, come to the Crown, when fetting little by his Youth, they meditated by what means or pretexts they might make War on the Peloponne fians; whom after their ancient Custom they had a mind to plunder; and believ'd they had a better right to make War on the Achaians, than any other People whatfoever, While they

POLYBIUS's General History Vol. II.

they were thus confulting, there happen'd an accident that further'd their purpose, and which, in fhort, they made use of to colour Dorimachus of Trichonia was Son of Nichostratus, who had acted so perfidious a part in the Assembly of the Bastians. This Dorimachus, a turbulent young Man, and every way an Atolian, (and after their manner) looking with a covetous Eye on other Mens Possessions, was employ'd by Publick Authority to Phigalia, a Town of Peloponnesus, under a shew of taking care for the Security and Defence of the Town and Territory; but indeed his Commission was to make Observations from thence of the Transactions of Peloponnesus. Soon after his arrival there drew a numerous confluence thither from fundry Quarters, of loose piratical People, who reforted to him, then residing in that Town, which was a Confederate of the ! Atolians, and fituate on the Frontiers of the Messenians; and he, not being able to gratifie these Robbers with the Prey they hunted after, (the Peace of Antigonus as yet subsisting among the Greeks) and, in short, having no better way to entertain them, permitted them to spoil the Messenians of their Cattel, who were alfo Friends and Confederates of the Ætolians. Who beginning on the Skirts of their Frontiers, driving away their Herds from thence, their Infolence grew at length to attempt fuch of their Habitations by Night, as lay at any distance dispers'd about the Country. The Messenians were thereupon urg'd to dispatch their Deputies with Complaints of those Outrages to Dorimachus, and to demand reparation of the wrongs they had receiv'd; who did not only not incline to redrefs them. but feem'd rather to incourage those who bare Arms under him, and indeed to inrich himself by sharing a good proportion of all their Booty. But at length being pres'd by new and frequent Importunities, his People continuing to act every day new Villanies, he told the Deputies he would come himself to Messina, and do right to those, who had complain'd of Injuries done them by the Ætolians. But upon his coming, and the Application of those who had been thus molested, some he dismis'd with Scoffs, others by adding further Injuries to those they had fustain'd, and terrifying others with hard and menacing Language. In thorr, it fo happen'd, that while Dorimachus remain'd at Messina, this lewd Rabble approaching near the Town in the Night, rifled a certain Country-House call'd Chyron, where killing all that made refistance, they bound the rest in Chains, and carry'd them away, together with the Cattle. Whereupon the Messenians, who had long lain under the resentment of this barbarous Treatment, and the little account Dorimachus feem'd to make of their Complaints, cited him to appear before their Assembly. Sciron A 4 hapPOLYBRUS's General History Vol. H.

happen'd to be at this time their Chief Magistrate, of whom fo his Vertue his fellow Citizens had a fingular efteem. He was of Opinion that Dorimachus (hould be held under restraint till r paration were made of the Damages they had fuffer'd, and the Authors of the Slaughter that had been committed were deliver'd into their hands; which Counsel was thought but just, and had the ready concurrence of the Assembly. Dorimachus inrag'd at this proceeding, angrily told them, That they shew'd themselves but weak in such a Determination, if they could not diftinguish that thereby they did not affront him, but the whole Etolian People; that their Proceeding was unaccountable: and that it would not be long ere it were reveng'd. There was at this time a certain ridiculous Fellow in Meffina call'd Babyrtas, who was every way fo like Dorimachus, that had he been habited like him, the refemblance both in Person, Countenance, and Voice was fo great, that it would have been difficult to know them afunder. Hereof too Dorimachus had been inform'd: Who, on occasion, treating the Meffenians after his infolent and menacing manner, Sciron a little transported; How now Babyrtas, faith he, do you think that you or your Threats can awe the Messenians? To this Affront Dorimachus made no Reply, and not able now otherwise to avoid it, yielded that the Messenians should pursue the Reparation of the Injuries that had been done them, and the Punishment of those who were found Guilty. But he was no sooner return'd to his Country, when this Outrage they had done him, so wrought in his blind, that without any other known Motive, he prevail'd with the Atolians to make War on the Messenians.

Book IV. of the World . WY 109

Ariston was at that time Prætor of the Ætolians; whose Infirmities did not permit him to be at the Head of their Army; to him Dorimachus was ally'd, as likewife one Scopas; to Dorimachus then he committed, in a manner, the intire Execution of his Authority: who nevertheless did not adventure in their Publick Affemblies to perfuade them to this War with the Messenians, not being furnish'd with Matter sufficient to determine them to fuch a Resolution; and he knew moreover, that his meaning would be too well understood; and that his Revenge and his Profit were the true Motives to fuch Counfels. So that forbearing to press it publickly, he labour'd to win Scopas to affift him in his Defigns against the Messenians. Telling him, there was nothing to be feared from the Macedonians, while the Authority was in such raw hands; Philip not having attain'd the Age of Seventeen Years; he further added. that the Eleans were the Atolians fast Friends. and in Alliance with them, and concluded there could be no hazard from thence, in breakbreaking the Peace with the Messenians. But the Argument that weigh'd most with Scopas, as an Ætolian, was the great Profit and Plunder that would arise thereby. For that their Country was rich, naked, and unguarded, and might be easily surpriz'd: and in a word. he promis'd himself greater Advantage by how much that in the Cleomenic War, that Territory alone had escap'd the Rapine and Violence of the Soldiers; and had felt none of those Evils of War by which the whole Country beside had been wasted. He further. and above all things, endeavour'd to persuade him, that nothing could fall out more agreeable to the Ætolians. And for what could happen with respect to the Achaians, if they should chance to oppose their march, they could have no just subject of Complaint, while they did no other than barely repel Force by Force; and in case they attempted nothing, that then the execution of what they had projected would be fo much the more feafible. That after all that had been faid. there were not wanting fair Pretexts to take up Arms against the Messenians, who had long given occasion enough, by their entering into Security to the Macedonians and Achaians, to take part with them in all their Enterprizes. Thus he prevail'd with Scopas, and his Friends, and wrought so far upon them, that without attending the Resolution of a general Convention of the Ætolians; or fo much as impartut

s, er ir d, l, y t l

parting their Purpose to the Magistrates in being; or making any one step according to ancient Custom; they did at once, and of their own Heads, in effect, declare War against the Messenians, Epirots, Achaians, A-carnanians, and Macedonians.

At the same time they fent out their Fleet of Pilferers to infest the adjacent Seas; who meeting with a Ship of the Kings of Macedon off of Cythera, made Prize of her, and carrying her into Port, fold both the Ship and her Company. In short, they proceeded to plunder all along the Coast of Epirus, imploying for that service Vessels of Cephallania, and made an attempt on Thyrea, a Town of Acar-Afterwards dispatching Troops by secret ways into Peloponnesus, they surpriz'd and kept possession of a Fortress call'd Clarium, in the heart of the Megalopolitan Territory; which they made use of for a Retreat. and place of Refuge, and to lodge and fecure their Plunder: But some time after they lost it again to Timoxenus, Prætor of the Achaians, affifted by Taurion; who had been left by Antigonus on his departure out of Peloponnesus, to administer the Affairs of the Kings of Macedon in those Parts. For Antigonus was in possession of Corinth, which he took and held by the confent of the Achaians, during the Reign of Cleomenes; and had not restor'd Orchomenus, which he had taken by force. but on the contrary kept it still in his Hands, and POLYBIUS's General Hiftory Vol. IL.

and held it for his own. His Motive it may be prefumed for so doing, being not only to preserve by that means, an easie ingress into Pelopounejas p but to be able by keeping a Garison in Orchomenus to secure and awe the neighbouring Territory to better Obedience.

Darimachus and Scopas then chusing their time, when the Prætor Timoxenus was upon refigning up his Charge, and Aratus who was to fucceed him not yet invested in the Authority. call'd an Affembly of the Ætolians in Rhjum, and having given their Orders to have the Cephallenian Vessels in a readiness, they embark'd their Troops, and transported them into Peloponnesus, taking their march towards Messina, and passing through the Territories of Patra, Phara, and Tritas, they made show to the Achaians of having no defign to molest them in their Passage. Howbeit the covetous Soldiers withheld not their Hands, but plunder'd and spoil'd the Country every where as they went, till they came to Phigalea. This Town they made their place of Arms, and the Seat of the War, and from hence made their Inroads on the Lands of the Messenians, without any regard to the right of Nations, and the ancient Friendship and Alliance that had been made and continu'd between them; but led by their Avarice against all Rules of Honour or Equity, robb'd and fpoil'd the Country with impunity, the MefMessens not finding themselves of strength

The Achaians, in the means time, according to Cuftom, affembled at Agium, where the Patricans and Pharicans preferred their Complaints of the Damages that had been done them by the Atolians in their march through their Country, The Meffenians likes wife complained of their Outrages and perfidious Dealing, and fent their Deputies to pray freedy Succours. After the Affembly had deliberated on these Matters, it was concluded. That the refentment of those of Paira and Phare was just, and ought to be profequited and that the case of the Messenians was to be commiserated : And it was especially agreed, That the State in general had been affronted by this infolent proceeding of the Anthony who had prefum'd in hostile manner to enter upon Achaia, not only without their permitfion, but against the Treaty of Peace. Where upon, justly provok'd by these infractions they resolv'd to fend Succours to the Melfenn airs; and that as foon as the Preton fould have pur them in Arms, they would then proceed further to execute what should be thought expedient by the Affembly .: Time wenus, who was yet in the Prottership, was not very well pleafed with the Expadition nor confequently with the Degree of the Allems bly for his Authority being not yet expis'A he had no mind to the Command as having pene but

but a doubtful Opinion of the Achaian Militia, which had been long unexercis'd in Arms. For after the expulsion of Cleomenes. the Peloponnefians weary of former Wars, and believing the present peaceable posture of their Affairs was likely to endure, had totally relinguish'd the Trade of Warfare, and nealected the use of Arms. But Aratus provok'd at the Indignities they had fuffer'd by the audacious Atolians, pursu'd the matter with another Spirit; nor was this the first occasion he had conceiv'd of aversion to that People. Wherefore he loft no time in putting the Achaians under Arms, but determin'd to come speedily to a Battel with the Atolians. In a word, five Days before he was to enter on his Charge, (Timoxenus delivering up the Seal) he dispatch'd his Orders to all the Towns and Cities, affigning them a Day when all their young Men, fit to carry Arms, should affemble at Megalopolis. And here we have thought it a Debt due to the Merit of Aratus to fav fomething of him in particular.

Aratus was endu'd with almost all the good Qualities, that could be wish'd, to compose a Man for great and publick Employments: He was able in the Art of Persuasion; conceiv'd rightly, and readily executed; and when it was prudent to be filent, he very well knew how to hold his peace. He had not his Equal in supporting with constancy the Diffentions of his fellow Citizens; second to none

Book IV. of the World.

-

n s, r

4

n

ė

none in composing them, and artful in acquiring Friends and Confederates. He was fubtile to contrive and conceal his fecret Practices, and none better at deviling Stratagems, and laying Ambushes against an Enemy. And in a word, he compass'd the most difficult Enterprizes by Patience and Application: Whereof manifold Instances may be enumerated: namely and principally, his furprizing of Sieyon and Mantinga; his expelling the Atolians out of Pellene; and his getting possession of Acro Corinth by intelligence. And yet after all, it is as true, that at the Head of an Army in the Field he was quite another Man; for as he was too flow in his Refolutions, fo was he too backward in Danger; and wanted affurance to look on any Attempt, that bore the least appearance of Terrour; which were defects that gave occasion of great advantage to the Enemy, who spoil'd and pillag'd the whole Country of Peloponnesus; and coming once to know his unguarded part, they never fail'd of succeeding when they attack'd him there. So true it is that Nature hath not only diverlify'd Men in their Bodies and Minds; but triumphs in dissimilar de of Mind in one and the same Man, who will be found not only capable and infufficient in things that are divers, but in the felf-fame things; we shall fee him Wife and Weak : Brave and a Coward by fits. Nor is there any thing new in what we remark on this Subject; or remote from from common Observation and Experience, if we but consider with attention. Some Men in heat of the Chace will boldly attack a wild Beaft, and do as bravely in fingle Combats, yet cannot endure the dangers of a Battel, and are not to be trusted in any Solemn Occasion in the Field. Thus the Thessalian Horse are not to be broken or resisted, when form'd into a Body in a Line of Battel; but fingly and Man to Man they are but a flight People. The contrary whereof is found of the Atelians. The Candiors are wonderful in their way, by Sea and Land; their Dexterity in Ambushes, Piracies, Surprizes, attempts by Night, and beating up of Quarters; and, in short, in every thing that requires Subtilty and Address, wherein they are superiour to all others: But in a pitch'd Field, they are hardly to be brought to look an Enemy in the Face. While it is found quite otherwise with the Achaians and Macedonians.

POLYBIUS's General History Vol. II.

We have taken occasion of this Digression, to the end the Credit of our History may undergo no blemish with the studer, when he shall chance to find the Characters of the same Men so inconsistent with themselves, and see them acting different Parts on the same Subject. After the achains, pursuant to the Decree, and attembled all their able Men for the Service of the War; the Messense, repeated thair Supplications by their Deputies, that they might not be abandon'd to the Mercy of tob and into first the mac chair Bee veri that fupp cond Citi whe they my purious in efficient of he mel marc as E had

of the Enemy, and declar'd their willingness to be admitted into the League; but the Achaian Ministers demurr'd to the receiving them into the Confederacy, without the Concurrence first obtain'd of King Philip, and the rest of the Allies. For the general Treaty that was made by the procurement of Antigonus, during the Reign of Cleomenes, between the Achaians, Epirots, Phocians, and Macedonians. Beotians, Arcadians, and Theffalians ; had been continu'd yet without infraction. Nevertheless the Messenians had leave to hope. that as foon as their Troops were form'd, a Supply of Succours should be given them; on condition they fent the Sons of their Principal Citizens to be kept as Hostages at Lacedamon, whereby to give Security to the Allies, that they should not come to any Accord with the Ætolians without their Concurrence. Lacedæmonians were at this time with an Army on the Frontiers of the Megalopolitans, pursuant to the Conditions of the Treaty, but in effect more to observe from thence the Event of these Agitations, than to act the part of honest Allies. And now the Affairs of the Messenians being concluded, Aratus sent to the Ætolians to let them know what had been determin'd; to require them to depart out of the Territory of Messenia, and not to march into Achaia on peril of being treated as Enemies. When Scopas and Dorimachus had receiv'd this Resolution of the Achaians, and understood they were now in Arms, and drawn together at the place of Rendezvous; they concluded together, that it was their best course to yield to their Demands, and thereupon dispatch'd Messengers to Cyllene, and to Ariston the Atolian Prætor, defiring them to take up all the Merchant Vessels they could procure in those parts, and fend them with expedition to the Island of Phlias. where they were to attend further Orders. In the mean time the Atolian Army (two days after) took their march with their Plunder, taking their way towards the Eleans, For with that People they had preferv'd a fast Friendship, thereby to keep their Passage open to invade and spoil the Peloponnefians, Aratus confiding too eafily on the Atolians, fo quickly executing what they feem'd to promife, difmis'd the Achaians and Lacedamonians, and march'd himself towards Patras with only three Thousand Foot and three Hundred Horse; to whom were joyn'd the Troops of Taurion. Dorimachus and Scoras receiving intelligence in the mean time that Aratus was in their Neighbourhood with an Army, and fearing left they should be attack'd at their Embarking, and being well enough dispos'd to have the War continue; dispatch'd away their Booty to the Fleet under a good Guard, with Orders to make Sail to Rhium with their Cargo, and there to attend, as if it had been their purpose to Embark there. When

When they themselves, after they had a while march'd after their Plunder, the better to fecure it; and observing every where as they went the disposition of the Country, turn'd off and march'd towards Olympia. As foon as they had the news of Aratus and Taurion's being in the Territory of Clitoria, with the Troops we mention'd, they then concluded they should not be able to Embark at Rhium without Danger or a Battel: And therefore were of Opinion, that their best course was to endeavour to come to Action as foon as they could, before the Enemy should be reinforc'd with more Troops; and while they continu'd fecure, and without any apprehenfion of a furprize. For they reckon'd that if they could be able to put them into the least disorder, they should then compass their Retreat without difficulty, with the Spoils and Plunder they had taken; and before the Stares of Atolia could come to the Assembly; or in case the Enemy, terrify'd with the suddenness of the Attempt, should refuse Battel, they should then likewise not fail of gaining their Passage according to their own desire. With these Thoughts they held on their march till they arriv'd near Methydrium, in the Territory of Megalopolis, where they incamp'd.

a

e

e

u

t

n

h ď

d

m rc.

en

And now albeit the Achaian Generals were well aware of the Enemies approach; yet they conducted their Affairs with so little fore-cast, that they may be said to have neglected no one thing that might avail to perfect the Character of Folly and Infufficiency. For, in fhort, as foon as they had quitted the Frontiers of the Clitorians, they came and incamp'd near Caphya; and when the Enemy on their moving from Methydrium, took their March by Orchomenus, the Achaians drew out and appear'd in Battel in the Fields of Caphya: being defended on one fide by the River that runs through that Country. After the Atelians had well confider'd the Ground; that the Enemy was advantageously posted; that they had cut many Trenches along the Bank of the River, whereby it was hardly any where passable; and after they had farther remark'd 'a strong desire in them to come to Blows: they upon deliberate Thoughts concluded it their fafest course to avoid a Battel : contrary to their first Determination : continuing therefore in good Order, they march'd on, taking their way towards Oligyrtus. keeping the high Grounds: And thought they should gain a great Point at that time. if they could compass their Passage without molestation, or being oblig'd to give the Enemy Battel. After Aratus and Taurion had flaid till they faw the Van of the Ætolian Army to have now gain'd the Hills; and the Horse in the Plains bringing up and sustaining the Rear; and who now drew near an Eminence call'd Propus : They fent out their Horse aster them, to whom they joyn'd their light-light-arm'd Troops under the leading of Epistratus the Acarnanian; these had order to fall on their Rear-guard to make some proof of the mettle of the Enemy. Now, if it were reasonable to come to a Battel, they could not have made a worse choice than to attack the Enemy in the Rear, for their Gross had already pass'd the Plains; but to have done as they ought, would have been to have ingag'd their Van, as foon as they had enter'd on the Champaign Ground. In which case they had had the benefit of fighting with the Advantage, both in the nature of their Arms, and the strength of their Order, wherein in plain Ground they were in both superior to the Enemy, who could not possibly have then fought without great odds against them. But while they committed this over-fight, and attack'd not the Ætolians till they had gain'd the Advantage of Ground, it was no wonder that the Success fell out accordingly. the light-arm'd Troops no fooner came to the Charge, when the Ætolian Horse had gain'd the Mountain, firm and in good order, keeping a good round march, whereby to come up and joyn their Foot.

Aratus, who could not very well discover how the Affair went, and not rightly judging of the Danger to which he was going to expose himself; imagining the Enemies hasty Motion to be no other than Flight, detach'd his Curiaffiers from the Wings, and commanded them to advance to the Charge, to reinforce and fustain the light-arm'd Soldiers. In the mean time drawing up the rest of his Troops into one Battalion, he march'd himfelf at the Head of them, and hastily advanc'd towards the Enemy; doing every thing with precipitation. But the Arolian Horse had no fooner pass'd the Plain, and joyn'd the Foot who had the Rear guard, and had now gain'd the Mountain; when they immediately made a halt, and ordering their Foot on the Flanks, incourag'd one another to fear nothing: And now facing about, the Shouts they made caus'd those who were at a distance to return and hasten to their assistance; fo that their number increasing, in confidence of their fuperiour Strength, and the benefit of charging from higher Ground, they boldly attack'd the Enemies Horse, and their lightarm'd Troops, and after a long and obstinate Dispute the Achaians were worsted: Who flying, fo terrify'd those who were coming in no very good order to their Relief, that they likewise retreated as fast as they came; partly out of ignorance of the state of the Battel. partly by meeting those of their Party, who were flying for Safety from the Enemy. This was the reason why it came to pass, that this Party only of five Hundred of their Men was beaten; and above two Thousand betook themselves to flight without ingaging. now the Atolians, who took Counsel of the pre-present posture of the Field, follow'd them hard in the Rear with great Shouts and Acclamations. In short, while the Achaian Troops were retreating back to the Gross, as they thought of the Army, which they hop'd would afford them a fafe reception; their Retreat was Soldier-like, in good and fafe order; but as foon as they perceiv'd them to have quitted the advantageous Post they had taken; that their Order was broken and confus'd; marching in a Defileé, then they fell into Confusion likewise, and scattering and dispersing themselves here and there, some got into neighbouring Towns, others meeting a Battalion of their own Troops, that advanc'd to their Succour, so terrify'd each other, tho'no Enemy were near, that they both broke and dispers'd. Of those that shifted for themselves, as we observ'd, some got into the Towns round about, and a good Party escap'd to Orchomenus and Caphya, which were not far off. For had they not had those safe Retreats at hand, they had been intirely ruin'd.

B 3

Thus have we related the Story of this Bat-tel, which was fought near Caphya.

As foon as the Megalopolitans came to understand that the Etolians were encamp'd in the Territory of Methydrium, they drew their whole Forces together, and march'd to the Assistance of the Achaians; but they arriv'd not till the Day after the Battel, and their coming prov'd of no other use, than to take care of burying the dead Bodies of those with whom they expected to have joyn'd, and hop'd to have reliev'd. So that digging a great Ditch in the Territory of the Caphyans, they there bury'd the dead, performing the Obsequies of those unfortunate Men with great Honour and Solemnity. And now the Atolians having obtain'd a Victory fo contrary to their Hopes, by the fingle fervice of their Horse, and light-arm'd Soldiers, took their march thereupon, without fear or danger, quite cross the Country of Peloponnesus. And after making an attempt on Pellene, and harraffing the Territory of Sicyon, they took their way by the Isthmus. These matters then which we have now related were the cause of the Consederate War; and the Decree that was conceiv'd thereupon, and confirm'd in a general Assembly of the Allies at Corinth; (where King Philip, who procur'd the same, and was present) was the beginning of the faid War.

In the mean time the Achaians soon after this Defeat call an Assembly; where Aratus was severely prosecuted with Complaints on all hands: As having been manifestly the occasion of the loss and dishonour they had sustain'd. And by how much his Enemies press'd him with Accusations, and with strong Reasons laid open his mismanagement; by so much did the Hatred and Indignation of the People increase against him. First, there was no

B

in gi

re

cc

pi

th

h

f

V

L

th

id

2

5, ne

at 0=

0 ir r

d

-

4

1 f no dispute but that Aratus had greatly err'd; in having, as one may fay, usurp'd the Magistracy, by taking it upon him before he was regularly elected into his Charge: And he could not deny, but that what he had enterpriz'd thereupon had very ill succeeded. Furthermore they blam'd him, for that feeing the Ætolians yet in the heart of Peloponnesus, he had been prevail'd with to dismis the Achaian Troops, notwithstanding he had been before well affur'd that Scopas and Dorimachus were firmly determin'd to embroil their Affairs; and to do all they could to ingage them in a War. The third Article against him was, His adventuring to ingage with fo few Troops, when he might with ease have made a good Retreat to the neighbouring Towns, where he might at leifure have reinforc'd his Army; and then given the Enemy Battel, if he had feen cause. The last and heaviest Charge against him was, That after he had resolved to give the Enemy Battel, he did not make one Soldier-like step in the whole Conduct of the For it had been in his choice to have fought on plain Ground, which would have been much to his advantage; for there the heavy-arm'd Troops could have ingag'd, from whose service he could hardly have fail'd of Success: While on the contrary he chose to fight on the skirts of the Hills, where his light-arm'd Soldiers only were brought to fight, than which nothing could have been con-

Bo

be

the

ań

H

Re

th

cl

L

p

to

u

t

d

ľ

contriv'd more to the advantage of the Enemy. But as foon as Aratus appear'd in the Affembly, and had first spoken of the many Services he had render'd the Commonwealth, he then reply'd to the Reproaches that had been utter'd against him. And made it appear that the loss they had sustain'd was not, through his Default; nevertheless he befought their Pardon; if he had been found wanting in any thing in that occasion; and pray'd they would not censure him with more Rigour than Humanity. In short, he so wrought with the People, that they grew inraged against those who had so violently prosecuted him, and it was long e'er they forgave them; and in the mean time renewing their good Opinion of Aratus, they gave themselves intirely up to his Counsel and Conduct, in all their future Enterprizes. These things came to pass, in the hundred and forty ninth Olympiad: While what we have now further to deliver, happen'd during that which follow'd.

The Affembly then proceeded to decree, That Ambassadors should be dispatch'd to the Epirots, Beetians, Acarnanians, and to King Philip; to remonstrate to them that the Ætolians having now the second time violated the general Treaty, had in Hostile manner invaded Achaia; and surther to demand Succours according to the Covenants of the Treaty, and to move that the Messenians might be

L

he-

ıy

h.

d

)-

t,

t

5

1

be taken into the Confederacy. Moreover. they decreed, That their Prætor should raife an Army of five Thousand Foot, and five Hundred Horse; that he should march to the Relief of the Messenians, in case the Ætolians should return to Invade them : And in conclusion, came to a determination with the Lacedamoniaus and Meffeniaus, about the proportion of Horse and Foot which they were to furnish respectively toward the Forces that were to be rais'd for the general Service of the War. These things being concluded, the Achaians (who could not forget their late difgrace) would not abandon the Meffenians. nor the Enterprize they had projected. The Ambassadors therefore acquitted themselves of their Commission. The Prætor levied Troops among the Achaians, pursuant to the Decree of the States, and concluded with the Lacedemonians and Meffenians, that they should each of them bring into the Field two Thoufand five Hundred Foot, and two Hundred and Fifty Horse; to the end they might have an Army on foot to answer any present occafion, confifting of ten Thousand Foot and a Thousand Horse.

The Ætolians in the mean time were not wanting to themselves, who (the day of their assembly now approaching) resolv'd to do their best to deal with the Consederates of the Achaians; and not only to endeavour a Peace with the Lacedemonians and the Allies, but even even with the Achaians themselves, on condition they would exclude the Messenians; and came to a Resolution, That in case they would not abandon them, that then War should be declar'd against them; than which nothing could be a more manisest Injustice. For being themselves in League with the Achaians and Messenians, they denounc'd War against those in case they held Friendship with the others; and on the contrary would enter into Friendship with the Achaians, provided they would become Enemies to the Messenians. But they made no difficulty to act fuch irregular Parts as thefe.

The Epirots and King Philip, having understood the case of the Messenians, yielded to their being receiv'd into the Consederacy. And while they condemn'd the Proceedings of the Ætolians, they were not surpriz'd at the Relation; it being nothing new or contrary to the practice of that People. They concluded however to give no surther Proofs of their Resentment, but resolv'd to continue at Peace with them. So much easier it is to pass by the Injuries done by those who have by a custom of transgressing taught us to forgive, than of such as take us by surprize, and from whom we could not have expected foul play.

Thus the Ætolians, who were held for the common Outlaws and Robbers of Greece, and whose manner it was to strike without warn-

Bo

in

pt

A

cl

C

w

I

la

h

c

t

1

. II.

on-

MS ;

hey

Var

nan

In-

ith

c'd

od-

ry

aito

ty

nto

y.

35

t 1-

S

e

0

e

ing, and make War without any previous or publick declaration, disdain'd to make any Apology for their Doings to those who had charg'd them with their injurious Dealing: On the contrary, they treated their Accusers with mockery and contempt. As to the Lacedamonians, who tho' they had been but lately rescu'd from the Tyranny of Cleomenes, by the Favour of Antigonus, and the Affection of the Achaians, nevertheless forgetting what they ow'd for that good Office, and the Affurances they had given to King Philip and the Macedonians to enter into no Engagements prejudicial to the Interests of the Achaians: they fecretly, notwithflanding fent their Ambassadors to the Ætolians, and became their Confederates.

And now when the Achaians had form'd an Army of their ablest Men, and the Lacedamonians and Messenians had promis'd to bring in their quota of Succours, behold a Naval Army arrives, confifting of Ninety Sail of Ships from Illyria, under the Command of Scerdilaidas and Demetrius of Pharus; who passing by the Island, which was the Bounds prescrib'd by the Treaty with the Ros mans, made their first descent near Pylus, which they attack'd, and after many fruitless Attempts were repuls'd. Afterwards Demetrius with a Fleet of fourscore Sail proceeded as far as the Cyclades, where he got Money from some, and plunder'd others of those Islands. As to Scerdilaidas, he made Sail directly for the Coast of Illyria, and came to Nanpatling with a Fleet of forty Ships, favour'd and in courag'd by Amina King of the Athamenes, with whom he was in Alliance. And afterwards by the procurement of Agefilaus entering into Conditions touching the distribution of the Plunder, he ingag'd to march against the Achaians. As soon as Agefilaus, Dorimachus and Scopas had finish'd this Treaty with Scerdilaidas, and had given him the Town of Cynatha for Caution, they march'd with the Illyrians into Achaia, the Actolians being at the Head of an Army as goodas they could possibly raise.

Ariston Prætor of the Ætolians, during these Agitations, remain'd at home, not only without acting in any thing, but feeming ignorant of all that was done, profess'd to be in Amity with the Achaians; wherein he shew'd himself a weak Man, and a slight Minister. For which way could he hope to conceal by words, what was made by deeds fo publick and notorious? But in short, he was held by all the World for one of little worth. Dorimachus, taking his march through the Territory of the Achaians, came to Cynætha. The Inhabitants of this Town, who are of Arcadian Extraction, had been long vex'd with civil Diffentions; and had expres'd their hatred one to another by Murders, Banishments, and all kinds of Violence: And had come

F

6

1

II.

Etas

in nes,

ter-

en

bu-

2.

us,

ca-

he a'd

ms

ey

ng

g.

oc

i-

0

3

1.

r.

come to a Resolution of making a Division once again of their Lands; and, in short, the Faction that favour'd the Achaians being at that time uppermost, the Power was in their hands; and the Governour himself was an A chaian. This being the Posture of Affairs in that Town, those who were under sentence of Banishment, had a little before the arrival of the Ætolian Army, labour'd about a Reconciliation, and befought the Government. that they might be restor'd to their Country. Upon which Overtures the Citizens were prevail'd with to yield to their admittance : but to the end they might not transact any thing without the concurrence of the Achaians. they first dispatch'd their Deputies to them, to obtain their Approbation. The Achaians readily accorded to the request of the banish'd Persons, conceiving they should thereby ingratiate themselves and gain the good will of both Parties; of those in whose Hands the Magistracy was then lodg'd, for their greatest hopes was in the Achaians; and of the others who were restor'd to their Country, as owing the benefit to their Favour. So that these Differences being compos'd, the Cynathians difmis'd their Garison and their Governour, and being now reconcil'd to their Exiles, who were to the number of about three Hundred. receiv'd them to their Friendship; who gave them all the evidences of Fidelity and fair Dealing, that could possibly be interchang'd between People firmly dispos'd to love and oblige one another. But without the least appearance of any new Motive of Diffention. they were no fooner receiv'd into the Town when they conspir'd together to betray their Country, and destroy those who but just before, had been the Authors of fo great a Benefit. So that it may be faid, That while they were protesting Fidelity by the Victims on the Altar, they were meditating the most horrible Crime, that could be conceiv'd against God or Man. For they had scarce made an end of swearing Fidelity on their being receiv'd into the Town, when they call'd in the Ætolians, and delivered it into their Hands, proud of being the Authors of their Countries ruine, that had given them Being; and of inflaving those who had redeem'd them.

Behold the manner how this piece of Treachery was contriv'd. Some of the Exiles had been Polymarchs (that is) they had been in command in the Army: Which fort of Magistrates (it seems) had a right to take charge of the Gates of the Town; had the custody of the Keys, and by Night the Command of the Guard. Now the Ætolians, who were not far off, having Ladders and all proper Provision with them, lay conceas'd waiting the occasion, when the Polymarchs, who had been banish'd (after having dispatch'd their Companions of the Guard, who were not partakers of the Villany) presently threw open the Gates. Whereupon one Party of the Ætolians enter'd that way, and another scal'd the Walls. In the mean time, the Inhabitants, terrify'd at an attempt fo furprizing, were confounded in their Judgments what to do, or which way first to go; for, in short, they no fooner advanc'd against those who had enter'd by the Gate, when they were alarm'd by the others who were scaling their Walls; but those who enter'd by the Gate being the greater number, found them more than work enough. So that in the end the Ætolians became Masters of the Place, and amidst the many Crimes they committed, perform'd this one act of Justice, namely, to cut those in pieces first, who had betray'd the Town into their Hands; making Booty of their Goods. Howbeit the rest afterwards far'd no better. their Houses being expos'd to Plunder, and many of the Inhabitants put to Torment, on fuspicion they might have conceal'd their Goods of greatest value. After this severe treatment of the Cynæthians, they plac'd a Garrison in the Town, and march'd with their Army towards Luffi, when arriving near a Temple of Diana, between Clytoria and Cynætha, a place of great Devotion, and a Sanctuary among the Greeks, they were about to rob the Goddess of the facred Cattel, and all that was near the Temple. prevent this Violence, and with hold them from

be-Benile

ms

. n

and

eaft

on,

wn,

neir

oft a-

l'd eir

g, 'd

ad n i-

yof

rgir

POLYBIUS's General History Vol.II.

from greater Crimes, the Luffata freely beflow'd part of what appertain'd to the Goddess upon them. Whereupon they dislodg'd from thence, and went and encamp'd before Clytoria.

In the mean time, Aratus, Prætor of the Achaians, having fent to demand Aids of King Philip, proceeded to make extraordinary Levies of Men, and call'd on the Lacedamonians and Messenians for the Succours they were oblig'd to contribute, pursuant to the Treaty. The Atolians likewise press'd the Clytorians to renounce their Alliance with the Achaians, and take part with them. Which being refus'd, they endeavour'd to reduce them by force, scaling the Walls of the Town. But being resolutely oppos'd by the Inhabitants, they were compell'd to retire. From thence they return'd to Cynatha, pillaging the Country all about, and carrying away the facred Cattel Then they propos'd to put of the Goddess. the Town into the hands of the Eleans; which not being accepted, they refolv'd to keep it for themselves, putting in Euripides for their Governour. But shortly after being allarm'd, at the news of the approach of the Macedonians, they burnt the Town, and retir'd; taking their march towards Rhium, with purpole to pals that way into Atolia.

e-d-

re

he

ng

.0-

MS

by.

MS

ıs,

C-

y

e-

y

y

II

el

ut

:

to es

g

10

e-

n,

0.

n

In the mean time, Taurion having notice of the Success of the Ætolians, and of what they had done at Cynatha, and hearing that Demetrius of Pharus was arriv'd from the Cyclades to Cenchrea, he importun'd him to come to the Affistance of the Achaians; to draw his Vessels over the Isthmus, and fall on the Ætolians in their passage. Demetrius, who had fled from the Rhodians, that were in pursuit of him, and had brought with him no less Shame than Plunder from the Cyclades, readily yielded to the Demand; especially in regard Taurion was to be at the expence of transporting over the Vessels. But that Work was no fooner over, when they understood that the Atolians had gain'd their Passage two Days before; whereupon Demetrius, contenting himfelf to make Inroads on them here and there, near the Sea-coast, retir'd to the Port of Corinth. In conclusion, the Lacedamonians, industriously and with evil intent, deferr'd fending those Aids, to which by the accord they were oblig'd; covering their malicious Purpose, however, with dispatching an inconfiderable Supply of Horse and Foot. While the Achaian Troops rendezvous'd about Aratus, who in short govern'd his Affairs in such fort in that occasion, as render'd him rather a cautious and wife Citizen, than an able General of an Army. For indeed the reflection on his late Difasters had so warn'd him, that he remain'd long undetermin'd how to proeced.

ceed, till at length Dorimachus and Scopus, having leisure given them to act the Part for which they came, return'd home without molestation: While Aratus in the mean time well knew, they must of necessity take their March by such Ways and Passes, so difficult and dangerous, that as one may say, they might have been beaten by the Sound only of a Trumpet. As for the Cynathians, tho' their usage from the Atolians was barbarous enough, yet so it was that all the World look'd on their Missortunes as a Punishment justly insticted.

But forasmuch as the Arcadians are in some Reputation for Vertue among the Greeks, not only for their laudable Manners, and the Humanity wherewith Strangers and all People are receiv'd among them; but chiefly for their Devotion to the Gods; it will not therefore be amis, that we give some account of the Brutality of the Cynæthians, and how it came to pass that being of Arcadian Extraction, they should have so degenerated, as to surpass in all forts of Crimes and Barbarities the whole Greek Nation beside. For my own part, I am apt to conclude, that this their Depravity fprang from their being the first and almost only People among the Areadians that apostatiz'd, and renounc'd the wholesom and wise Institutions of their Forefathers: and the common and natural Ties of Humanity, fo ftrictly observ'd by all the Arcadians beside, Mufick 2-

or

ne

eir alt

ey

of ir

0 b's

n-

ne

ot

u-

le

ir

re

ne

ne

n

le

I

A

)-

fe

7.

t-

11-

k

fick is esteem'd useful every-where, but to the Arcadians it is necessary; I mean the true Mystery and Science of Musick. And no Credit is to be given to a Saying of Ephorus, fo unworthy of the Author, who in the beginning of his Writings tells us, That Mufick was invented to deceive and abuse us. Nor is there any ground to conclude that the Cretans and Lacedamonians did, without Reason, introduce the Use of the Flute and Singing, instead of the Trumpet in War: Nor that the original Arcadians did not, on folid Grounds, alott the Preference to Musick, as to give it a Part in the Establishment of their State; and whatfoever - Austerities they may otherwise profess, they make it an indispensible Part of the Education of their Children, and enjoin the Study of Musick to their Young Men till they arrive at the Age of Thirty Years, And most certain it is, that there is hardly any People beside the Arcadians, who in their private Families accustom their Children from their tenderest Age, (and which is grown into a Law) to fing Hymns to their Heroes and their Gods; every one according to the Stile and Mode of his Country. Then after their Children have been instructed in the Musick of Philoxenus and Timotheus, they are brought yearly to the Theatre, where they celebrate the Feast of Bacchus with Songs and Dances; as likewise the Games, call'd the Games of Childhood, as their Young Men perform those call'd call'd the Games of Touth. So that all their Lifelong, they divert not themselves so much in their Entertainments, and Conversation. in the Exercise of their Wit, as their Voices, finging one to another by turns. case any one should profess himself ignorant of other Arts and Sciences, he may do it without reproach ; but none may prefume to want Knowledge in Musick, because the the Law of the Land makes it necessary; nor dare they own their Insufficiency therein, it being held infamous among that People. They are likewise at the Charge of the Publick instructed in martial Dances, and to Fight and Exercise their Arms, according to the Cadence of Musick, and are seen every Year on the Publick Theatre, to show the People their Improvement in that Exercise.

In short, we may safely conclude, That their Ancestors did not establish this Costom amongst them, so much for Luxury and Delight, as from a wise Consideration of the Life they lead, and the Climate they inhabit; being a People addicted to Labour, and, in a word, leading a toilsome and industrious Life: Which seems to proceed from the Inclemency of the Air, for the most part cold and melancholy. For it is an establish'd Law in Nature, that we should partake of the Soil that breeds us. Nor can there be a better Reason render'd for the Unlikeness of Nations, as the difference of the Air they breathe, and the strua-

tion

H.

cir

ch

n, es, in nt

it

ne he

or

it

y

nnd

će

ne

1-ıt

n

.

.

tion of the Countries they inhabit. And hence it comes to pass, that the distance of Chimates begets that diffimilitude among us, both in Manners, Make, Humour, and Complexion. These gladsome Remedies then we have related, were wifely instituted to cure and calm by Art the Rigours and Defects of Nature. Furthermore, they had a Custom of mixing Men and Women indifferently in their Sacrifices and Publick Assemblies, wherein they frequently met. They likewise instituted Quires, where the Youth of both Sexes convers'd, and fung and danc'd together; and in a word, they left nothing unattempted. that might prevail to fosten and sweeten those Austerities of Nature to which the Climate had condemn'd them. And the Cynathians, who by reason of their situation, had of all others the greatest reason to preserve these Customs among them (they being the most Northern part of all Arcadia) no fooner fell to neglect these wholesom Institutions, when they fell into Diffentions and civil Discords; and grew at length into such depravity of Manners, that their Crimes, in number and measure, surpass'd all the Nations of the Greeks beside.

Great and manifest Testimonies were given, of the Corruption of this People's Manners, from the Aversion the Arcadians in general had conceiv'd against them, who, when they dispatch'd their Ambassadors to the Lacedemonians, after their Defeat, they hardly came into any Town of Arcadia, where the Inhabitants did not warn them out again by Sound of Trumpet, and the Voice of their Publick Crier. And the People of Mantinga proceeded yet farther; for they had no sooner caus'd the Cyngethian Ambassadors to depart, when they cleans'd themselves as from Insection, and slew Victims about their Town and Country.

and offer'd Sacrifices of Purgation.

We have taken occasion to enlarge on this Subject, to justifie the Arcadian Customs and Manners; and to the end lest the Arcadians themselves, by a wrong Judgment and Belief. that Musick became thus familiar among them. barely for Luxury and the entertainment of idle Minds, should at length fall into Contempt of that part of their own Laws and Institutions. Nor are the Cynæthians themselves withouta share of our Commiseration in this Digresfion; who, if by the Favour of Heaven, they should one Day see an end of their Affliction. may be drawn to return to the ancient Manners of their Country; and embrace and principally cultivate this Science among them. whereby to foften and bend their Minds with those Charms, which have power to tame wild Beafts themselves; than which, no way feems more likely to polish them from the Rust of Barbarity. But having spoken enough of Cynatha, 'tis time now to return to our Bufiness.

The Atolians having acted these Violences in Pelopounessus, as hath been related, returned home without Impediatent. In the interim Philip arrives at Corinth to succour the Achains; but coming too late the occasion was lost; he therefore sent his Dispatches to the several Consederates, praying them speedily to send their respective Deputies to him there, that they might deliberate together about their general Affairs. While he himself led his Troops towards Tegwa, on a rumour that the Lacedamonians were fallen into civil

Broils.

d

k

d

n

The Lacedamonians, who had been us'd to Kingly Government, and were but newly by the power of Antigonus fet at liberty, fell into Factions; and Seditions growing among them, they were labouring to establish Equality in their State. In these Disputes there were two of their Ephori, of whom it could not be discover'd to which Party they were inclin'd, while the other three openly manifested their being of the Ætolian Faction : Considering King Philip as not yet of Age ripe enough to Rule the Affairs of Peloponne-Jus. But when, contrary to their Opinion, and more speedily than they expected, the Ætolians were retir'd; and Philip arriv'd out of Macedon sooner than was believ'd; the three Ephori began to fall into suspicion of Adimantus, one of the other two: for they well knew he was privy to their Defigns,

ľ

figns, and teftify'd his disapproval of their Counfels; wherefore they apprehended left he when Philip should approach nearer might reveal to him all that had pass'd. Wherefore imparting their purpose to certain young Men of their Party, they proclaim'd by found of Trumpet, that all who were of Age to go to War, should affemble with their Arms at a certain place of Rendezvous near the Temple of Minerva Chalciace, to make head against the Macedonians, who were approaching their Borders. / Hereupon the People affembled. terrify'd at this furprizing News; but Adimantus disapproving the proceeding, hast ned to those who were so drawn together, and fpake to them after this manner: It would be wbolfome Counsel to conceive such Edicts, and make such Proclamations, upon notice that the Atolians our Enemies were on our Borders: but not at this time, when the Macedonians our Friends, from whose Bounty we have receiv'd so many good Offices, are approaching us; having their King in Person with them. He had no fooner ended these words, when those who were of Intelligence with the other Ephori fell upon him, stabbing him to death with their Poinyards, and together with him Sthenelaus, Alcamenes, Thyestes, Bionidias, and many other Principal Citizens. Polyphontes and some others, who foresaw the Danger, escap'd to King Philip. Ephori, becoming by this Action formidable in

H

heir left

ght

ore

1en

of

to 1 2

ple

nft cir

ed.

di

led nd be nd

be

5:

ns

e-3

mg.

m.

n

er

m

s,

y-

n

in Sparta, fent forthwith to the King, laying the cause of what had happen'd to the charge of those who had been flain; praying him to deferr his coming to Sparta, till their Tumults should be over, and their Affairs in a more quiet posture: In the mean time they give him folemn affurance of fair Dealing, and that they would perform the Capitulations punctually.

Their Ambassadors found the King near the Mountain of Parthenia, where they perform'd their Commission. After he had given them Audience, he told them they should return back to Sparta, and let the Ephori understand, that he intended to proceed on his way to Tegea, where he defired they would dispatch to him proper Persons with whom to confer touching the present poslure of Af-So they commissionated ten of the Principal Citizens of Lacedamon for that Negotiation, appointing Onias chief of the Embassy.

Upon their arrival at Tegas, they were introduc'd to the King in Council, where they renew'd their Accusation against Adimantus; making him the Author of all those. Diforders, that had happen'd among them. And, in short, they made the King plausible Promises to act in every thing the part of faithful Confederates, and to proceed in fuch manner as to make it manifest, that they furpast in Zeal and Affection those whom he held for his faithfullest Friends. After this Discourse, and more to the like effect, the AmAmbassadors withdrew. Those who were present in the Council were divided in their Opinions; and being well affur'd that Adia mantus, and those who had been assassinated were facrific'd for their Fidelity to King Philip, and that the Lacedamonians prevaricated, and were dispos'd to enter into Alliance with the Ætolians: counselled the King to make them an Example, and treat them as Alexander had done the Thebans upon his coming to the Crown; But others of the graver fort were for more moderate Counsels; remonstrating that fuch a Punishment was too great for their Fault: and that it would be enough to punish the Promoters and Heads of the Sedition, by removing them from the Magistracy, and placing the Authority in fuch Hands as were firm to the Interest of the King.

After they had all spoken their Minds, the King deliver'd his Opinion; if it were true that what he said in that occasion was his own: For, in truth, it is hardly probable, that a young Prince of seventeen Years of Age, could be able to determine with such Sagacity, in an Affair of so much moment. But as it is good manners in Historians, to attribute to the Princes themselves the Resolutions that are taken in their Cabinets; so the Readers of History ought to conclude, that such wholsome determinations flow rather from the riper Conceptions of their faithful Servants, and such as are admitted to the Prince's

Book IV. of the World. ISY

Prince's Privacy. And there is all the reason in the World to do Arotus the justice of believing him to be the Author of what the King deliver'd on that occasion.

vere

heir

Adi.

ited

Phi

ted.

ith

ake

ex-

ing

ort

ra-

for

to

iti-

y,

as

he

ue

is

e,

of h

t.

0

0

•

Who faid, That if the Confederates had any difference among themselves, what was fitting to be done in fuch case, was to admonish them by Word or Letter, and let them know that their Proceedings were observ'd: That whatfoever was done in violation of the general Alliance, ought to be punish'd by the joint Sentence of the Confederates: But that fince it did not appear that the Lacedamonians had been guilty of any Infraction of the Union; but, on the contrary, had given the Macedonians fuch Affurances of their fincerity, as they did, there was no reason to deal feverely with them. That, in a word, it would not be just in him to animadvert on them for light Offences, whom his Father had pardon'd while they were Enemies, and he a Conqueror. This Opinion then of the King prevailing, That it would be better to connive at what had happen'd, he dispatch'd Petræus, one of his favourite Servants, in company of Onias, to exhort the Lacedæmonians to continue firm to the Treaty, and to ratifie it by a new Oath, while himself march'd with his Army to Corinth; having given the Confederates an admirable instance of his Prudence and Magnanimity, in this his behaviour towards the Lacedamonians.

The

POLYBIUS's General History Vol. H.

The Ambaffadors of the Confederates were already met at Corinth, where, upon the King's Arrival, they fell to deliberate will him about their common Affairs, and whe resolution to take touching the Atolian. The Bestians accus'd them of having in time of Peace plunder'd and violated the Temple of Minerva Itonia: The Phocians, for attack ing in Hostile manner the Towns of Ambry fus and Daulius : The Epirots charg'd them with making Inroads and Plund'ring their Country: The Acarnanians, for their attempt on Thyreum; and after it had been made evident to the Assembly, in what manner they had posses'd themselves of the Fortress of Clarium, in the Dominion of the Megalopolitans: That they had ruin'd the Country of Pharus and Patræ in their march, destroy'd Cynætha with Fire and Sword, prophan'd the Temple of Diana at Luffi, befieg'd Clytoria, made War by Sea at Pylus, and Landed in hostile manner on the Territory of Megalopolis. In short, when all these Outrages of the Ætolians had been prov'd, and canvass'd in the Assembly, they accorded unanimously to declare War against them. So after they had prefac'd their Decree, with enumerating the Causes and Provocations of the War; it was concluded, That all those who had been fusferers by the Ætolians, fince the Death of Demetrius, Father of Philip, should be receiv'd into the Confederacy; and that if any

ians

time

npk

ack

hem

heir

mpt

evi

hey

of

oli-

of

y'd

the

ia,

in

00-

he

in

to

ad

he

as 6

of

y

47

by the violence of the Times had been aw'd into Obedience or Alliance with the Ætolians. and pay'd them Tribute, that they should be forthwith fet at liberty, the fecurity of their respective Governments committed to their own hands, and no Garrisons impos'd upon them; but that they should be permitted to return to their ancient Laws and Customs. free from any Tribute or Impositions whatfoever: That Aid should be given the Amphiayous, in order to their re-establishment in their Privileges, and the restitution of their Right to the administration of the Temple. which the Atolians had violently wrested from them, to make themselves Masters of that facred Place, and all the Revenues thereof. This Decree being ordain'd in the First Year of the Hundred and fortieth Olympiad. the War of the Allies thereupon enfu'd, which was begotten by the violent and general unjust proceedings of the Ætolians. And now Ambassadors were sent from the Assembly of the States, to all the Confederate Towns, to the end the Decree being every-where receiv'd and ratifi'd by the Suffrages of the People, they might jointly and separately in their distinct States, publish the War against the Atolians; whom King Philip likewise advertis'd by his Letters, letting them understand, That if it were so, that they had just argument or motive whereby to indemnifie themselves, and could fairly wipe off the Impu-purations that lay against them, that the would do well to apply themselves to the general Affembly, and endeavour to put period to fo folemn a Process by a Conference That they did but make Oftentation of their Weakness, by thinking they might with impunity spoil and pillage, as they did every. where, without any declard War, or appar rent cause for such violence : and that those who underwent these Outrages would reft unreveng'd; or that it would be believ'd the Sufferers would be reckon'd the Aggressors. and Authors of the War, while they only apply'd themselves to such Remedies as their case made necessary.

The Ætolians, on the receipt of these Intimations from King Philip, were at first perfuaded he would not appear, and therefore prefix'd a Day for their affembling at Rhium! afterwards, when they heard of his arrival, they fent to let him know, that they had not Power to determine any thing in their Publick Affairs, till the Convention of the Gene ral States of the Ætolians. In the mean while, the Achaians affembling at the usual time, ratify'd the Decree by a general Vote of the Assembly, and afterwards declar'd War against the Ætolians. And now the King coming to Agium, where the Diet was held, he there explain'd himself in many Points, and proceeded in fuch manner, as greatly pleas'd and oblig'd the Assembly; where they

the nce:

bei

im-

ry.

pa-

10fe

reft

the

ors,

ap.

neit

In

er-

ore

991

al,

tot

ıb-

lei

an ial

te

he

as

y.

15

re

where they renew'd with him the feveral Treaties that had been heretofore made between his Ancestors and the Achaians.

About the same time the Ætolians assembled in their General Council, where they elected Scopas for their Prætor, he who had been the Author of all those Violences we have related. By what name then shall we be able to distinguish such a Determination? For to spoil and treat their Neighbours in hostile manner, without any Declaration of War; and not only not to punish the Authors of fuch Outrages, but to conferr on the Ring-leaders the prime Authority in the Government, feems to me the extremity of all Dishonesty. For what gentler Terms will fo vile an Action bear! But our sense thereof will be better known by what follows. When Phabidas surpriz'd Cadmaa by Fraud and Perfidy, the Lacedamonians, tho' they would not quit their possession, yet they punish'd the Authors of the Action, believing they had done enough to expiate for the Wrong, in the chastisement of the Offenders. In short, they might have proceeded with less severity, and it would have been more beneficial to the Thebans. Afterward, during the Peace of Antakidas, they publish'd a Decree, That Liberty should be restor'd every where to the Greeks, who should enjoy their ancient Laws and Customs; nevertheless, they withdrew feveral Towns.

50

When they dissolved the Government, and ruin'd the Town of Mantinea, they colour'd the Action by asserting they had done them no Injury, in transplanting them from one Town to a great many. But 'tis the summ total of Folly and Depravity, to think because our Eyes are shut, that all the World is blind. Thus both the one and the other of these People, by pursuing these pernicious Maxims in the administration of the States, drew on themselves many and grievous Calamities. Wherefore as well in Private Affairs as Publick Negotiations, such Counsels are never to be follow'd, by any who would consult their own Good and Tranquility.

King Philip having now come to a Resolution with the Achaians, touching their common Affairs, return'd home with his Army, to make preparations for the War; having gain'd not only among the Confederates, but the Greeks in general, a mighty Opinion of his Goodness and Magnanimity, by the publication of the Decree we have menti-

on'd.

All these Matters were transacted about the time that Hannibal the Carthaginian General was deliberating about laying Siege to Saguntum after he had subdu'd all that part of Spain that lies on the other side of the River Eber. Since the Enterprizes of Hannibal then take beginning.

the

and

ur'd

hem

one mm

aufe

ind.

nefe

ims

OII

ies.

03

neir

efo-

m-

ny,

ing

but

of

ub.

ıti-

he

ning, and beer date with these Affairs of Greece, there feems to be a necessity that we should treat of them alternately, according to the Method of our preceding Book; to the end, having punctual regard to the Time. we may confront (as one may fay) the Affairs of both these People of Spain and Greece. But foralmuch as those of Italy, Greece, and Aha were produc'd from different Causes, tho' they had one and the same event; we have therefore thought fit to handle them diffinctly and a-part, till such time as we shall arrive at that Period, when the Matters whereof we have made mention come to mingle, and grow to conspire towards one and the same end. By which means, the beginnings and steps of each one respectively, will be made the more intelligible; and the interweaving them afterwards be less subject to confusion. when the time of the respective Occurrences shall be adjusted, and the Means and Causes of things duly fet down. In conclusion, they will together compose but one intire History; and, in short, these Affairs became thus mingled toward the end of that War, which was finish'd in the third Year of the Hundred and Fortieth Olympiad. Wherefore there will be all the reason in the World to treat succeeding Matters conjointly, as those that go before separately, after having first briefly refresh'd the Memory in some Occurrences that fell out about those times. Having propounded D 2

ral WW at

ce inıg,

POLYBIUS's General History Vol.II.

ded to our felves not only to write our History with perspicuity, but so as to engage the Reader's esteem, who shall study it with attention.

King Philip pass'd the Winter in Macedon, in making Levies and Preparations for the War, and fortifying his Frontiers against the Attempts of the Barbarians, who were his near Neighbours. Afterward finding out Scerdilaidas, he a little too boldly confided in, and contracted Alliance with him; and promising him Aids towards his acquiring certain Towns in Illyria, and censuring the Actions of the Atolians, (which pleas'd Scerdilaidas above all things) he easily won him to his purpose. For private Injuries have their force, and differ not from publick in the nature but magnitude of the Offences. And there is nothing fo fatal to fuch as league together in criminal and violent Actions, as the breach of Faith among themselves. was experimented by the Ætolians; for it was a Stipulation between them and Scerdilaidas. that he should share a proportion in the Spoils and Plunder that should be taken, who was to be a Party in the Crimes that should be committed, if he would joyn with them in their Expedition against the Achaians. vertheless on their taking and spoiling the City of Cynatha, where was found great Booty of Slaves, Cattel, and other movables, they admitted him to no part thereof. Which breach

л.

ory

ea.

en-

don.

the

the

his

out

ded

and

ing

the

er-

im

neir

na-

nd

to-

as

his vas

as,

oils vas

be

in

Je-

he

eat

es,

ch

ch

breach of Articles so distasted Scerdilaidas. that when Philip had refresh'd the sense of that Injury, he was wrought to promise he would enter into the common Alliance, on the terms of being paid yearly the fumm of twenty Talents, and would make War on the Ætolians by Sea with a Fleet of thirty Vessels.

And now the Ambassadors, who had been dispatch'd to the Confederate States, first coming to the Acarnanians, treated with them; who frankly confirm'd the Decree, and declar'd War against the Ætolians. And yet the they shou'd have taken time to explain themselves, and expres'd their just apprehenfions of the War, there is no People against whom less Offence could have been taken, as being Borderers on the Ætolians; and what is more, were very ill able to defend themselves, and not long before had been deep fufferers by Ætolian Violence.

But there is no doubt but a generous Nation, jealous of their Honour, prefers that to all other Considerations, both in their publick and private Treaties; and herein the Acarnanians have furpass'd most of the Greeks, who, weak as they are, have in defence of their Reputation, ingag'd in the greatest Dangers. Wherefore there is no People among the Gracians with whom Friendship may be more fafely contracted; there being none who profess more regard to publick or private Faith, or will venture further for the love of Liberty. As to the Epirots, tho' they ratify'd the De cree, yet they would not yield to declare War against the Ætolians, till King Philip should first proclaim it: Wherefore they dismis'd the Atolian Ambassadors with promise to continue in good terms with them, wherein they made show of very little Generosity. Ambassadors were dispatch'd in like manner to King Ptolomy, to diffuade him from yielding any help to the Ætolians against King Philip, either by supplies of Money, or otherwife. As to the Messenians, on whose score the War first brake out; they reply'd to the Ambassadors, That they would not ingage in the War unless Phigalia, which commanded their Frontiers, were first drawn off from the Atolian League: But Oenis and Nicippus, with others who favour'd the Oligarchy, had procur'd this Declaration against the general Inclinations of the People, wherein they feem to have been much in the wrong. For while I deny not but War is an Evil greatly to be apprehended, so it is as true that our fear thereof ought not to subject us to suffer every thing, and debase us into Villanage to avoid it. For why do we keep fuch a stir about preserving Equality among the Citizens, and the freedom of Speech in Deliberations? Why, in short, does the name of Liberty bear such a Price among us, if there were not fomething more valuable than Peace it felf? For what Man

D 3

I

rty.

Dev

Wat

wld

s'd

to ein

ity.

ner

ld-

ng

er-

re

he ge

m

u,

0-

i-

0

I

e

r

V

Man ever applauded the Thebans, who out of fear of the Dangers they must have been expos'd to, for the fake of the general Good of Greece, during the Median War, enter'd into Confederacy with the Perfians. I am not therefore of Pindar's mind, who to defend that weak Action hath faid somewhere in his Writings, That a wife Citizen, who would study the true Welfare of his Country, prefers above all things the Benefits and Tranquility of Peace. And he thought perhaps that he had all the World of his fide, while on the contrary he could-not have broach'd a more pernicious and scandalous Opinion. For as there is nothing more eligible and profitable, than Peace on Conditions Just and Honourable: So nothing can be more hurtful or shameful, than when 'tis purchas'd by Servitude, and stain'd with base and infamous Ends.

However it were, the Principal Citizens of Messina, who had no further Prospect than private and present Profit, pursu'd Peace more paffionately than they ought. true, that at the price of many Evils which they were content to fuffer, they shunn'd some present Fears and Dangers: But the Difease increasing by degrees, they by those Measures brought their Country at long run into grievous Calamities. The best reafon that I can conceive may be render'd in their defence, is, That they were Borderers ОП on the two most considerable States, not only of Peloponnesus, but of Greece it felf, namely, the Arcadians and Lacedemonians; of whom; the one was always their most implacable Enemy, from their first possessing of that Country; the other a peaceable Neighbour, wishing them well and defiring their preservation. Nevertheless they had never openly declar'd themselves either Friends to the Arcadians, or Enemies to the Lacedamonians. Wherefore when at any time those two People chanc'd to differ, or were otherwise engag'd in War, the Meffenia ans found their account thereby, and enjoy'd their repose: But when ever the Lacedamonians were difingag'd from other Wars, they presently enter'd on new Designs to molest and subdue the Messenians; who never prefum'd to contend with a Power fo much fuperiour to their own: Nor had ever made any Friend, who would adventure any thing in their behalf; so they became oblig'd at length, either to comply with the Lacedamonians, and patiently submit to the Yoke they impos'd; or otherwise to abandon their Country with their Wives and Children. short, they had already frequently felt these hardships, and but a very little before tasted thereof. And it were much to be wish'd. that the Affairs of Peloponnesus could be fettl'd on fuch a Basis, and the care of its Conservation might so affect Mens Minds, that there fhould

H

on-

me-

of im-

ing

ble

ing

had her

the

iny or ni-

y'd

money

eft

re-

fuide

ng

at lake eir

In efe

ed

d.

ľá

a.

re ld

should be no occasion of applying such Remedies, as I shall mention by and by. Bur in case any general Change or Revolution should threaten, my Judgment is, that there is no Course or Counsel so wholsome for the Messenians and Megalopolitans to preserve them in a fafe and lasting Possession of their Country, as the contracting a firm and fincere Union one with another in every thing, according to the Advice of Epaminondas, and to preserve their Friendship inviolate.

In conclusion, this Counsel may be confirm'd from ancient Story. For the Meffenians, not to mention other matters, erected a Column in the Reign of Aristomenes in the Temple of Jupiter Lycaus, where according to the report of Callisthenes this Inscription was engraven:

Fate will not always favour Tyrants rule; Messenian Jove their ruin bath decreed. Whatever Ills are done, no Ills are hid From the Divinity's all-feeing Eye. Grant then, O Jupiter, whom all adore, Arcadia may be still in thy protection,

It is not improbable but that when they were driven from their Country, they then erected this Column, with the Inscription, to implore as it were the Favour of the Gods, to conlerve to them their fecond abode. Nor was it indeed without good reason; for the Arcadians cadians did not only receive them into their City, upon their being compell'd to abandon their Country during the War of Aristomenes but admitted them to a Fellowship of Privileges with their Citizens, and confented to their mixing with them in Marriage. Fur thermore upon discovery of the evil Purpose of King Aristocrates, they put him to death and exterminated his whole Race with him But to look no further into ancient Story, what hath come to pass since Megalopolis and Messena were restor'd, makes proof enough of the truth of what we have been observing For after the Battel the Greeks fought near Mantinga, where the Victory became undo termin'd, through the loss of Epaminondas, the Lacedamonians in hopes of getting Mes. fina into their Hands, would have excluded them from the Treaty of Confederacy, while the Megalopolitans, and the rest of the Arcadi an Party obstinately opposed it; and so far prevail'd in favour of the Messeninas, that they came at length to exclude the Laceda. monians themselves from the Treaty.

Now if Posterity can but reslect with attention on these things, we shall not be cenfur'd for having thus inlarg'd on the Points we have been treating. And it will be perceiv'd that what hath been deliver'd, is in service of the Messenians and Arcadians; to the end that bearing in mind the Injuries they have receiv'd from the Lacedamonians, they may

ol. II

theit

ndon tenes.

Privi

ed to

Fur

pole

leath

him

tory,

and

gh of ring.

near

nde

idas.

Mef

ided hile

adi

far

that da-

at.

en-

We

v'd

e of

end

ave

ay

be

be incited to a closer Union in their Alliances: And that whensoever they would deliberate rightly about the security of eithers Estate, it may grow into an establish'd Principle among them to admit no breach in their Confederacy, either through sear of War, or love of Peace.

As to the Lacedamonians, they, according to their manner, dismiss'd in the end the Ambastedors of the Allies, without any reply: fo much had their Folly and Pride prevail'd on their Judgment; which verifies a good old Saying, That great Prefumption is but another name for Vanity and Weakness of Mind. Afterward, on creation of their new Ephori, those who had been the Troublers of the State, and were guilty of all that Bloodshed we have noted, dispatch'd advice to the Ætolians, counselling them to send Ambassadors to Sparta; which they presently perform'd, and Machatas foon arriv'd on the part of the Ætolians, whereupon he applies to the Ephori, demanding that Machatas might be heard in the Publick-Affembly : then he propos'd the coming to a creation of their Kings according to ancient custom, and that it was not to be fuffer'd, and against the tenure of their Laws, that the Dominion of the Heraclidae should be discontinu'd. None of the Propositions pleas'd the Ephori; but wanting strength to stem the Current of the opposite Faction; and fearing violence from the

the hot-headed young Men, they reply'd That as to what concern'd the Kings, they would take it into deliberation. In the mean time, they were forc'd to affemble the People to give audience to Machatas: And being met, he there appear'd, and spake many things to dispose them to an Alliance with the Ætolians; impudently and unjustly calumniating the Macedonians, and extolling and foolishly exaggerating the Praises of the Ætolians. When he had left the Assembly. great and warm Debates arose touching the Propositions he had made, one Party holding with the Ætolians, and another violently opposing them. But at length, after certain of the gravest Senators had reminded the People, on the one hand, of the fruit they had reap'd by the good Offices of Antigonus and the Macedonians; and, on the other, the Outrages of Charisoenus and Timeus, when the Ætolians broke in upon the Lands of the Lacedamonians, and putting all to Fire and Sword, carry'd a multitude of the neighbouring People away captive; and did their best to surprize and ruine Sparta it self, aided therein by those who were under the Sentence of Banishment whom they took with them: The People thereupon were wrought to change their mind, and refolve to continue firm to their Alliance with King Philip and the Macedonians. So Machatas return'd home, without any fruit of his Negotiation,

ol.II

ply'd

they

mean

Peo.

being many

with

Calling

the

bly,

the

ding

ntly

tain

the

hey

onus

the

hen

the

and

ur-

eft

ded

en-

ith

tht

ue

nd

b'r

bn

And now the Authors of the late Sedition. diffatisfy'd with these Proceedings, and resolving not to acquiesce to the present Methods of Administration, corrupted certain Persons to engage with them in a most detestable Enterprize. It is the Custom of their young Men to affemble once a Year in Arms, to celebrate a Sacrifice in the Temple of Minerva Chalciaca; in the performance of which Ceremony, the Ephori are oblig'd principally to be prefent, and direct all things relating to the faid Sacrifice. At this Solemnity then, a Party of those, who were in Arms to celebrate the Feast with greater Pomp, fell on the Esbori while they were ministring, killing them in the very Temple, tho' it were a San-Auary even to those who were under Sentence of Death: And forgetting what was due to that facred Place, murder'd those of their Party at the Table, and before the Altar of the Goddess. Afterwards, to compleat what they had projected, they caus'd Gyridas, and many other Senators, to be put to death; and banishing the rest of the anti- Ætolian Faction, came to an Election of new Ephori of their own Stamp, and proceeded to enter into Confederacy with the Ætolians. So great was their Hatred to the Achaians and Macedonians. But the whole World was witness, that all their other Counsels were conducted by the same Steps of Imprudence and Temerity; being indeed dispos'd to that manner

ner of Government through their Inclination to Cleomenes: whose escape from the Agree ans and return to Sparta, they wish'd an daily expected. Such Impressions of Lon doth the Gentleness of Princes leave in Men Minds, that whether present or absent kindles fuch Sparks of Gratitude and Good will, as are not prefently extinguish'd: An tho' it were now three Years fince Cleomened flight, and the City had been govern'd ac cording to their ancient Institutions, there had not been so much as one motion made in Sparta for the Election of their Kings: But the news of his Death was no fooner published when both the People and Ephori proceeds to deliberate thereupon. The Epbori, who were of the Faction of the Seditious, and had made Alliance with the Ætolians, chose for one of their Kings Agespolis, whose Father was Cleombrotus, who succeeded Leonidas, he being the nearest in Blood. They appointed for his Governour Cleomenes the Son of Cleon brotus, and Brother to the first Agefipolis. As to the other King, altho' Archidamus left two Children begotten of the Daughter of Hippo meden: and there were others of the fame Lineage, but more remote, tho' they were of the Family; yet these were rejected, and the Royalty conferr'd on Lycurgus, who de scended not from any one Ancestor that had worn the Crown. But at the price of a Talent he bestow'd on each of the Ephori, he bought his Adoption to Herceles, and his Title to the Crown of Sparta. So true it is, that all Villainies are every-where bought at B price. And it will be seen, that the Authors of these Violations, were not punish'd in their Children, or Children's Children, but they themselves liv'd to share the Fruit of their Folly.

62

Datio

Eypti

d an

Lon

Men

t , 1

Good

An

enes

d an

e had

de in

Bu

ifh'd eda

Whe

had

e for

the

, he

nted

com

two ame

vert

and

de

had lent

ight his

As

Machatai receiving notice of these Proceedings, return'd speedily to Sparta, where he labour'd his utmost with the Kings and the Ephori, to dispose them to declare War with the Achaians, there being no other means lest, whereby to vanquish the Difficulties they were now under, with those who oppos'd the Alliance with the Actolians, who had likewise a Party in Actolia it self. But having at length prevail'd with the Kings and the Ephori, he return'd back to his Country, after having, by the Weakness of those whom he had gain'd to his purpose, successfully executed his Commission.

As to Lycurgus, he march'd out, and made incursions on the Frontiers of the Argians with the Troops he had rais'd, with whom was join'd the Militia of the City: So that taking the Argians thus by surprize, the Enemy easily effected their purpose. Soon after he took Polichna, Prasia, Leucas, and Cyphas. He got possession likewise of Glimpes and Zarax; after which good success, the Lacedamonians proclaim'd War with the Achaians. Thus all things sorting to the Wish of the Arolians, they enter'd on the War with great affurance, while, on the contrary, the Achalans had but a melancholy prospect of their Alfairs: For King Philip, on whom they morely'd, was yet but forming his Army. The Epirots were flow in their Preparations; and the Messenians continu'd Neuters, while the Atolians, assisted by the Eleans and Laceda.

Æto-

monians, attack'd them on every side.

At the same time Aratus's Prætorship en pir'd, and Aratus his Son was, by the Suffra ges of the Achaians, chosen Prætor in his Place. Scopas likewife was Prætor of the A. tolians, whose time was now half expired the Ætolians Election of Magistrates being in in the Month of September, the Achaian March. Aratus the Younger then enter'd on his Charge early in that Summer, which was remarkable for the beginning of fo many Wars: For Hannibal was then meditating the Siege of Saguntum. The Romans dispatch'd L. Amilius at the Head of an Army into Illyria, against Demetrius the Pharian, where of we have made mention in our preceding Book. Antiochus enter'd on the War, which was wag'd for the Lower Syria, after Theodorus had deliver'd up to him Tyre and Ptolemais. Lycurgus King of Sparta arrogating the fame Authority as heretofore Cleomenes did, laid siege to Athenaum, belonging to the Megalopolicans. The Achaians made Levies of Horse and Foot to sustain the War that so · much

ôl H

gra

Achai

ir Al

mo

The

and e th

ceda

PC

offra

his his

pir'd

ng in

a Lans

d on

Was

iany

the

ch'd

into ere-ling

nich

bea

ole-

the

did,

Me-

of

fo

ich

Æ.

much threatned them. Philip march'd out of Macedon with an Army of Ten thousand heavy-arm'd Troops, Five thousand Targeteers, and Eight hundred Horse. These were the hostile Preparations that were then everywhere making. Befides that, the Rhodians were at the same time engaging in a War with the Byzantines, the Quarrel being grounded on the Reasons we shall now deliver:

The Byzantines are situate the most commodiously of any People, who by their neighhood to the Sea, have all things transported to them that minister to the supply of human Life, or Luxury; but they cannot boast of the like Felicity by Land with respect to the Sea; their City stands so on the Coast, that no Vessel can go or come without their Permission. And whatever can be supply'd by the Pontic Sea, which yields abundance of every needful thing they are Masters of. a word, the Countries bordering on that Sea, afford us plenty of Hides, and of good Slaves, Honey, Wax, falted Flesh, and all forts of the The Byzantines enjoy like Commodities. likewife, by the Benefit of Navigation, all things of the growth of our Countries; as, Oil, Wine, and the like. Bread-Corn is also a Commodity among them, which fometimes they tuy, and at other times they fell. will concern the Greeks then, either net to deal at all in these kinds of Merchandice, or 10 refolve to Trade without Advantage; if the E BIZAN-

66

Byzantines should at any time enter into League with the Thracians or Galatians: Or in thort, totally to abandon all Commerce with those Countries; for we should be no longer at liberty to Navigate in the Pontic Sea, by reason of the straitness of the Inlets, and the multitude of Barbarians that possess the Country round about. There is no doubt then, but 'tis the Felicity of the fituation of Places to which Byzantium owes the many Advantages it enjoys: for be it either for the Confumption of fuch things whereof they abound, or the Supply of what they want, they Negotiate both with eafe, by the benefit of their Navigation; nor are those who hold Commerce with them, without their share of Commodity: Wherefore as they are beneficial to every one, so the Greeks in gene ral have a just Consideration for them: And they do not only think they have a right to their Thanks, to but their Succours and Affistance, whenfoever they are invaded or presid by their barbarous Neighbours. But foral much as the Nature and Situation of this Place is known but to a few, it lying out of the way of the general Commerce of the World; we have therefore thought it worth our Pain to shew how it comes to pass that Byzantium enjoys fo many Advantages, superiour to most other Cities. For it is our purpose to be ever very particular in this fort of Subjects and to endeavour to give fuch a prospect of those things as shall be found worth remark

1.11

into

· O

merce

be no

C Sea,

and

is the doubt

on of

many

r the

they

they

y the

chofe

their

y are gene

And

ht to

Affi

ressd

foral

Place

the

orld:

Pains

tium

r to

le to iects.

A of

nark

ing

fes

ing, as to paint them as it were to the view; at least to engrave such a Picture of them in the Mind, that the Images shall be but just thort of Truth it self.

That which we call the Pontic Sea then. contains in Circuit about nine hundred Leagues; it hath two Outlets or Streights. the one into the Propontis, the other gives it Communication with the Palus-Maotis: whose Circuit is upwards of three hundred Leagues. And forafmuch as many eminent Rivers of Aha, and more of the principal Rivers of Europe, discharge themselves into this Lake, it comes to pass that when it swells by the Tribute of fo many Waters, it enlargeth and emptieth it felf by the Streight into the Pontus, and the Pontus is deliver'd by the Propontis. The Mouth or Streight of Polus-Maotis is call'd Bosphorus Cimmerius; which is in Length about threescore Furlongs, in Breadth about thirty, the Extremities whereof are every-where full of Flats and Shelves. The Outlet of the Pontus is call'd the Bosphorus of Thrace, being in Length about one hundred and twenty Furlongs, but the Breadth is unequal; for at the entrance of the Narrow between Chalcedon and Byzantium, it is about fourteen Furlongs over; but further out about Hieron, a Place so call'd on the Coast of Asia, it is not above twelve Furlongs broad; it is reporred, that Jason first facrific'd here to the twelve gods. In a word, there are two cau-fes to which is attributed the perpetual Current one way, that is observ'd to run in the two Streights: The one plain and intelligible to every one. For while their Waters are ince fantly replenish'd, by the Income of so many great Rivers, there is no other way but b these Streights to discharge them; for being bounded and confined every-where by the Coast, the surplus of Water necessarily and naturally flows out by these passages. other cause is this; namely, that the River fwelling with the great Rains, their Streams be come thereby fo rapid, that mighty quantities of Sand and Soil are by the Torrent convey down; which lodging at the bottom, occafion the Water to fwell fo much the higher and consequently augments the Stream we an speaking of. These are the true Causes then of this constant Current; and we are not to hearken to the Reports of Sea-faring People in these cases, but to have recourse to the Evi dence of folid Reason, by which alone the natural Causes of Things are understood.

But fince it is our chance to fall on this Discourse, it will concern us to endeavour that nothing may be lest unsaid, that may serve to inform the Understanding, touching the nature of the Subject we are treating. Wherefore we shall labour to lay things down as plainly as possibly we may, to the end no Doubt may remain on the meanest Capacity. And, in truth, there lies an Obligation on as, who live in the present Age, to examine things with our utmost care and circumspection. For as there is nothing remains in these our Days undiscover'd of Earth or Seas, it would be a reproach to fly to Fiction with the Poets and others, who have paid us with Fables, to give us Notions of what themselves knew nothing. Nor will it become us to tread in the steps of Historians, who have gone before us, who (as Heraclitus observes) by their weak reasoning, leave doubtful things more in the dark. Our business therefore must be to win the Faith of the Reader, by the force and evidence of Reason. We conceive then that the Pontus and Palus Maotis have been ever receiving, and do at this Day continue to receive, and fill up with the Sand and Rubbish that is brought down by the Rivers we mention'd, and will at last be totally fill'd up and levell'd; taking it for granted, that the Countries continue their firuation, and the Causes hold their force. For fince Time is without limits, and the Space subject to the Accidents we have noted, every-where bounded and enclos'd; what wonder is it to conceive, That tho' the matter convey'd thither be never so inconsiderable, that in process of Time that little will amount to fill a great space? And, in short, 'tis a Rule in Nature, That fuch things as are subject to increase and diminish, have their period some time or other, let the steps of Progression be hing ting owa

ol. II

Cur

ligib

ince

many ut by being

7 th

y and

The

liven ns be titic

vey'd

occa

gha.

e an

then

ot to

le in

Evi

e the

t his vour

may

on us,

never to flow or invisible. But forefmuch the quantity of Matter brought into these Se or Lakes, is not a little, but without question great, beyond all computation, there remain no dispute but the Effect we prognosticate will be foon feen, and is indeed now visible For the Palus-Maotis is almost already fill up, where in some places there is not now above fifteen or twenty Foot depth of Water infomuch as there is no more adventuring to navigate with Ships of Burthen without a P. lot, who is acquainted with the difficulties Furthermore, whereas this Sea (as our Fore fathers have observ'd) was heretofore reple nish'd with falt Water, as the Pontus at this day is, 'tis observable that it is now a fresh Water Lake, the furface of the falt Water be ing furmounted by the accession of so much Matter, as is accumulated and brought this ther by the means we mention. The like must in time fall out in the Pontus, and is in fome measure already come to pass: But this cannot be yet so easily remark'd, by reason of the very great depth of Water in the Channel. Howbeit, those who carefully examine the Matter, may be fatisfy'd of the truth thereof. Hence the Danube discharging his Waters out of Europe by several Outlets, hath begotten a Lift or Bank of Earth at least forty Leagues long, swelling above the surface, distant a Day's Sail from the Shore: Which Bank is observ'd to encrease daily by the addition uch .

e Sea

eftin

main

flicat

fible

fill's

now

Vater

ng to

a Pi

ilties

Fore

eple

thi

be

nuch

thi-

like

s in this

n of nel.

the

re-

ers

be-

rty

di-

ch

id-

ao

dition of new Matter constantly brought thither; infomuch as whenfoever Veffels happen to light upon any of these places, which Sea-faring Men call Shelves or Banks, they are for the most part broken, and suffer Ship-Take then my Opinion how it comes to pass that these Mounds or Banks of Earth, grow at that distance from the Continent, and not nearer to the Shore: The Soil and Rubbish then, which by the force of the Torrent is convey'd down, is by the prevalence of the Current transported still forward into the Sea, as long as there remains any strength in the Stream that keeps it in motion; but as that declines, (which happens by the depth and fpreading of the Waters, which at length are lost in the wide Sea) the Matter which was before by the Torrent press'd on, finks and fettles to the bottom. And in proportion to the greater or less rapidity of the Rivers, these Banks or Bars are at a greater or less distance from the Shore, tho' the depth be great between that and the Continent. This is feen plainly in the gentlest and smallest Streams, whose Bars are nearer the Shoar; which yet in great Floods (their Current being quicken'd) transport and remove this Bar at a further distance than ordinary into the Sea, in proportion to the swiftness of the Flood, and the quantity of the Soil it brings down. Hence it will not appear strange, that such a mass of Matter as we have noted, should grow to E 4 fo great a dimension, as that which is found at the mouth of the Danube; nor that such quantities of Sand only, but that Rocks and Tree should be unrooted and rent from their Seats. It will not then be hard, I say, to credit what we have deliver'd, but obstinacy rather to disbelieve it; since we behold the smallest Brooks to make an easie passage through all Impediments, which increasing their Rage they come to pierce, and remove by their violence the hardest Rocks, carrying Sand, Stones, and all before them; filling up, and so changing the sace of things, that the View and Landscape becomes in a short space quite another prospect.

Let it not be thought strange then, I say, that Rivers fo great and rapid, should produce fuch effects as we have Calculated, by their descent into the Pantic Sea, which we have maintain'd, must at length be fill'd up; and levell'd. For he who weighs the matter rightly, will not only perceive it probable, but necessary. For if we reason but from hence, that as the Waters of the Palus-Maotis are fresher than those of the Euxine, and those of the Euxine in a degree different to those in our Seas; it is a plain consequence, that the Euxine must at long run become a Lake of fresh Water, and at length a Moor or Fenny Continent. But this effect must be the product of so much a longer space, than it hath been brought to pass in the Palus-Maoris,

by

nd at quan-

Frees

cats.

r to

lleft

lla r

lage

heir

and,

and

iew

uite

ſay,

uce

neir

ave

nd ht-

out

CC,

are

ofe

nat

ke

n-

he

is, y by how much the Euxine is of greater depth and content than the other: Howbeit, we may justly conclude, it will be by some degrees proportionably fooner, by how much more the Rivers there are greater and more nume-We have been thus extensive, the better to inform fuch as think it impossible, that the Euxine (which hath a!ready visibly suffer'd some advance towards it) should ever become fill'd up; and that so ample a Sea fhould, in process of time, grow into Conti-We had likewise a further end by thus enlarging on this Subject; namely, to reprove the fond and tabulous Relations of Sea-faring People, and that the Readers may not do like Children, who being yet ignorant of all things, liften with aftonishment to every extravagant Tale that is told them: But having their Minds cultivated by the notions of Verity, they may become qualify'd to determine of the truth or falshood of what they hear.

But let us further examine the fituation of Byzantium. The Streight then that lies between the Euxine and the Propontis is in length about fifteen Miles (as was noted): On that part towards the Euxine, stands the City of Hieron, on the extremity thereof; the other part towards the Propontis, terminates in the space or opening that lies between Byzantium and the opposite Shore: Between these on the side of Europe, and in the very narrow of all, stands stands the Temple of Mercury, built on a Rock, that like a Promontory jets a good way into the Sea, where the Streight is not above five Furlongs broad. Here it was that Report makes Darius to have built his Bridge in his Expedition against the Scythians. forafmuch as the Coast on both fides, from hence downward towards the Propontis trends away streight, and preserves a parallel distance as it goes, the Current by that means move equally. But as foon as these vast Water that descend from the Euxine Sea come to be pent up and streighten'd, by the narrow palfage made by the Promontory where the Temple stands, which we but now mention'd on Europe side, here driven as it were by some mighty force, they recoil over to the Afia Shore, and from thence return to the Coal of Europe, beating on those Head-lands or Promontories call'd Hestia; and from thence with unspeakable violence take their courk over to Afia again, towards that part of the Country call'd the Ox, where there stands 1 place bearing that Name, and where the Fable tells us Io, having swam over the Streight, first set her Foot. From hence, as one may fay, being push'd off, it takes its course at length over to Byzantium, where the Waters now dilated and spreading themselves about the Town, the Current loseth it felf, and carries but a weak stream into the Gulf, but terminates in a manner at the Cape call'd the Horn. ol. I

OB 1

good

is not s that ridge

Nov

from

rends

tance

nova

aten

to be paf-

the

on'd

forme

Afian

Coaff

s or ena

urfe

the

ds 1

Fa

ght,

nay

at

ters

out

ar

er-

the

rn.

Horn. In a word, tho' the greatest part of these Waters make their traverse over again towards the Asian Shore; yet forasmuch as the strength of the Current is now lost, the motion ceaseth ere it arrives so sar as Chalcedon, situate on that Coast. For after so many reverberations, the Streight now opening wider, the force of the Stream being spent, cannot reach directly over; but with a kind of Biass declines and steals away. And leaving Chalcedon, dies in the Channel, and so purfues a direct course by the Streight.

Hence it comes to pass that Byzantium enjoys fo many Benefits, and Chalcedon fo few; while to the view one would be apt to judge their situation equally Advantageous. as we have noted, the Navigation to the one is very tedious and difficult; while to the other the Stream compels, and gives a quick and easie passage. Hence those, who are bound from Chalcedon to Byzantium, cannot stand directly over, by reason of the strength of the Current; but are forc'd first to gain the Point call'd the Ox, and the Town of Chrysopolis; whereof the Athenians were heretolore possess'd, and were the first, who by the Counsel of Alcibiades, exacted a Toll from all that Traded into the Pontic Sea. From hence advancing a little, they fall at length into the Current, which then forceth them away directly to Byzantium. The like happens whether you are bound upward or down-downward to this place. For if Ships are bound from the Hellespont towards the En xine, while the Wind blows at South, or from the Euxine towards the Hellespont during the Levants; the Passage is direct and easie along the Coast of Europe, from Byzantium to the Streight of the Hellespont, where stand the Towns of Seltos and Abydus. But those who sail from Chalcedon coasting it along, find quite the contrary; for they are forc'd to ply and turn to Windward, by reafon of the Land of the Cyzicenians, which runs far out into the Sea. In short, as 'tis difficult for those who are bound from the Hellelpont to Chalcedon to Coast it along on the Europe side; so when they arrive near Byzantium 'tis as hard to fetch over to Chalcedon, through the exceeding violence of the Current, and the other Impediments we have mention'd, which cross their Passage. impossible then to arrive directly from thence at the Coast of Thrace, by reason of the strength of the opposing Current and contrary Winds; which, let us stand which way foever we can, blowing almost constantly Trade, is ever out of the way for that Navigation. For as the Southerly Winds blow fair to wast us into the Pontic Sea, and the opposite Point is fair to bring us back; so but with one or the other of these two Winds tis impossible to gain our Passage. Thus have we open'd the Causes from whence these great Bene1.1

are

E

10 el

du-

and

zam

here

But

it a-

are

rea-

hich

'tis

the

on ;

near

bal

the

ave

is

nce

the

on-

vay

tly

VI-

OW

he

fo

nds

ve

eat neBenefits arrive to the Byzantines by Sea: And what we shall now further observe, will explain the Reason of their Missortunes by Land.

Byzantium stands in the Country of Thrace, which borders on and begirts their Territory quite round from Sea to Sea, whence it comes to pass that the Byzantines are in perpetual Hostility with that People. And by how much these Barbarians are a very numerous Nation, and govern'd by many Princes; by fo much is the Task more difficult to reduce them; nor have the Byzantines any prospect of being able, with all the Provision they can make, ever to deliver themselves from the Molestations of that War. For when at any time they chance to obtain any fignal Victory over any one of these Princes, they are sure to have three or four combine with much greater Power to revenge and ingage in the Quarrel. And in case they should be dispos'd for Peace sake to yield to pay the least Acknowledgment to any one of these their Neighbours, they were to expect by gaining one Friend to purchase five Enemies. Whence it falls out, that in this Warfare there can be no end; and there is nothing more irksome than the Neighbourhood of so brutal a Race of Men, or more terrible than Hostility with a barbarous Enemy. Furthermore, over and above all these Evils to which they stand expos'd to the Landward, they are condemn'd to one kind of fuffering, not unlike that he which the Poets have fentenc'd Tantalus. For possessing a rich and fruitful Territory, which they take care to Cultivate, their Harvell ! no fooner ripe, when these Thieves visit them and rob them for the most part of the Fruit of their Labour; which misfortune they lament in vain. Thus then the Byzantines become familiar with the Calamities they fuffer, and by the force of Custom endure the Hardships of incessant Hostilities, persisting to preserve their ancient Alliances with the Greeks inviolate. But after the Gauls (to fill the Measure of their Adversity) came to be their Neighbours, under the leading of Comontorius, their Condition became then most deplorable.

These Gauls were a part of those who fwarm'd out of their Country with Brennus; who, after the execution done on them at Delphos, did not presently pass into Asia on their arrival at the Hellespont; but invited by the Fertility of the Country about Byzantium, refolv'd there to fix their Abode. Afterwards subduing the Thracians, they establish'd a Regal Seat in Tula, and grew quickly to be Formidable to the Byzantines, whom they drove to great Streights; being oblig'd on Comentorius his invading and spoiling their Frontiers, to buy off that Burden by an Annual Present : sometimes of three Thousand Aurei: fometimes of five Thousand: and some Years it amounted to no less than ten Thounat m

For

vhich

eft i

hem,

lit of

ment

Come

and

Thips

ferve

vio.

lure

igh.

their

who nus:

at

on

by um.

irds da

be

ney

on eir

n-

nd

nd

en

u-

Thousand, whereby to redeem their Country from the Rapine of these Barbarians. Till at length they became driven to be plain Tributaries to the yearly fumm of fourfcore Talents, which lasted to the Reign of Clyarus In whom the Gallic Dominion expired; the whole Nation being utterly exterminated by the Thracians. It was at this time that the Byzantines, finking under the weight of their Adversity, sent their Ambassadors to sollicit Succours from the Greeks, and feek Relief from the many Hardships they endur'd. And, in a word, pres'd by their Wants they came at length to a Resolution of exacting a Toll, from all who navigated into the Pontic Sea: for but few of the Greeks, it feems, laid their Sufferings to Heart. But they no fooner began to levy this Duty, when the Innovation was referted on all Hands, and the Rhodians above the rest were censur'd, who being at that time Massers of the Sea, submitted to so undue an Imposition. And this, in a word, produc'd the War which we are about to relate.

The Rhodians then provok'd, as well by their own feeling of this new Tax, as through the Instigation of others, dispatch'd their Ambassadors jointly with those of their Allies to the Byzantines, to persuade them to abolish it. But the Byzantines could not be brought to accord to the Proposition, in confidence of the Equity of the Motives they had for what they they did, and they were the more confirm in their refusal by the Authority of Hecata dorus and Olympiodorus; who, being at the time first in the Magistracy of the City, op pos'd it with all their Power: Whereupon the Ambassadors return'd home with a Negative Reply from the Byzantines, and the Rhodian thereupon declar'd War against them, and a the same time sent to sollicit King Prusias to joyn and take part with them, being well as fur'd that Prince did not abound in good Will towards that People.

The Byzantines by the Example of the Rhodians dispatch'd likewise their Ambassadon to Attalus and Achaus, to follicit Aid from They found Attalus dispos'd to affil them; but he was not in a present Condition to yield them any great effects of his Friend thip, inafmuch as he had been lately compell'd'by the Power of Achaus to retire and confine himself to the ancient Limits of his Father's Kingdom. As to Acheus, who now held the Dominion of the whole Territory in Aha on this fide Mount Taurus, and had late ly affum'd the Title of King, he fairly promis'd the Byzantines, and frankly embracing their part, put them in mighty hopes; and thereby gave matter of apprehension both to Pruhas and the Rhodians.

Achaus was of Kin to Antiochus, who succeeded to the Kingdom of Syria, and became posses'd of the Power he held, by the means

Book IV. 105 of the World.

Vol.

nfirm

lecate

at the

on th

egativ

podian

and a fias to ell al

d Wil

of the

Tadon

from

affil

lition

riend

com-

of bis

now

ry in late

pro

cing

and h to

Suc-

ame

eans

we shall now relate. After the Death of Seleucus . Father of Antiochus, and that Seleuon his Eldest Son had taken possession of the Hingdom, Achaus accompany'd him in his March and Passage over Mount Taurus, about two Years before those Matters were transacted, whereof we shall by and by make relation. Seleneus had no sooner taken possession of the Kingdom, when he receiv'd Intelligence that Attalus had already feiz'd and brought under his Dominion all that part of Afia lying on this side Mount Taurus; whereupon he forthwith fell prudestly to deliberate about the Affairs of his Government. But he had no fooner pass'd Mount Taurus, at the Head of a powerful Army, when by the treasonable Practices of Nicanor, and Villainy of one Apaturius a Gaul, he was Murder'd. But Achæus foon compass'd a just Revenge on the Traytors for the Death of the King his Kinfman; and taking upon him the Conduct of the Army and the Government, manag'd all things with great Prudence, and manifested in all his Deportments a singular sufficiency and Avacity of Mind. And albeit the Soveraign Authority became now left to his Election, and the People freely courted him with Tenders of the Diadem, he nevertheless rejected the Offer; and determining to reserve the Succession to Antiochus, Brother of the dead King, led the Army from place to place, and manag'd the War so prosperously, that that he foon recover'd all that had been lot on this fide the Mountains. But vanquifly at length by the Temptations of his Felicity, and after having beaten and confin'd Astalia to his own City of Pergamus, and reduc'd all those places that had been forceably poffest he renounc'd all those noble and generous Purposes he had taken; and invading the Dominion, confented to be call'd King, and became the most active and formidable Pring of all on this fide Mount Taurus; infomuch as barely on the prospect of his Friendship and Affistance, the Byzantines took assurance to wage War against the joint Forces of Kine Prufias and the Rhodians. Prufias had an old grudge against the Byzantines; who either our of inadvertency, or in contempt, had omit ted to dedicate certain Statues, which the had once decreed to erest to him. He had further motive of Indignation against them, for that they had interpos'd their utmost good Offices to give a period to the War, that had fallen out betwixt Artalus and Achaus, judge ing rightly that their Reconcilement would not turn to his account on many Consideration Furthermore, he was displeas'd with ons. the Byzantines, in that they had fent their Ambassadors to Attalus, on the occasion of his celebrating the Feast of Minerva: but sem none to him when he folemniz'd the Soterian Festival. Thus having hoarded in his Mind fo many various motives of Displeasure, it was en lot

82 POLYBIUS's General History Vol.

Ming

licity.

etali

c'd al

nerous

ng the

s, and

Prince

much

p and ice to

King an old er ou

they

good

had

judg.

vould

erati

with their

on a eria

Mind

t Was

no

no wonder he embrac'd with joy the occasion the Rhedians gave him to discharge his Spleen; so they resolv'd by their Ambassadors, that the Rhodians should attack them by Sea; and he would prosecute them no less vigorously by Land.

These then were the Causes and the beginning of the War which the Rhodians declar'd against the Byzantines: And, in a word, the Byzantines engag'd therein with Courage enough, while their Hopes of the Friendship of Achaeus lasted: And in prospect of Tibites coming to their assistance from Macodon, they took assurance to conclude, that Prusas (whom they most apprehended) would then share with them the danger of the War.

Pruhas pursuing the Dictates of his Anger. had already fallen on the Byzantines, taking Hieron, a Town they had bought some Years before, at the price of a great Summ of Money, in consideration of the commodious situation of the Place, both with respect to the fecurity of their Commerce and Navigation into the Pontic Sea, and the greater fatety of their Slaves, and other Profits arifing by their Trade on that Coast. He likewise seiz'd on all they possess'd in Mysia, a Territory in Asia, whereof they had been long Masters; while the Rhodians furnish'd out six Men of War on their part, to which the Allies adding four more, with this Squadron of ten Sail, they flood towards the Hellespont, the Command

F 2

being

being given to Xenophon. Of these, nine remain'd about Sestos, to obstruct all Commerce with the Pontic Sea, while the Commander in Chief, with one Vessel only, shap'd his course towards Byzantium, as well to obferve their Motions there, as to fee whether these Preparations for the War had not wrought a change in their Resolution. But finding them firm and determin'd to abide the War, he return'd to the rest; and without any Action fail'd with the whole Squadron back At the fame time the Byzantines dispatch'd Ambassadors anew to Achaus, to folicite speedy Succours from him; they like wife fent to Tibites, to perfuade him to come in Person from Macedon: For it was the general Opinion that he had a more rightful Claim to the Kingdom of Bithynia, than Pruhas who was his Nephew. In a word, the Rhodians observing this firmness and diligence in the Byzantines, were as careful on their part to profecute their purpofe.

They observ'd, That this Obstinacy which appear'd in the Byzantines to sustain the War, was grounded principally on their prospect of Aids from Achaus; and knowing that Andromachus, Father of that Prince, was at that time under restraint in Alexandria, and that he labour'd by all means possible to obtain his Enlargement, they therefore resolv'd to send Ambassadors to Ptolomy, to prevail with him to put Andromachus into their hands. This

Mat-

Matter had been under Treaty heretofore, but not so solemnly; but at this time it was folicited earnestly, to the end they might be thereby enabled to transact their Affairs with Achaus with better effect. In short, Ptolomy giving Audience to the Ambassadors, did not readily yield to their Demands; for Andromachus being both Father to Achaus, and Brother to Landice, the Wife of Seleucus, he propos'd to make a better Bargain of him for himself: For the Matters that had been in dispute between him and Antiochus, were not yet compos'd. And Achaus having now lately taken the Title of King, was become very powerful, extending his Dominions far and wide. Nevertheless, he was at length prevail'd with to gratifie the Rhodians, who at that time could do any thing with him: So he deliver'd up Andromachus to be by them restor'd to his Son. By which grateful Office of theirs, with other Honours publickly decreed to Acheus, they won him from the Byzantine Party, in whom lay their greatest hope of Succours. Another Misfortune besel them of almost equal prejudice to their Affairs: For Tibites, whom they had perswaded to leave Macedon to come to their affistance, dy'd in his Journey; whose Death so perplex'd their Counsels, that they began to fink in their Resolution; while Prusas, animated by their Afflictions, rais'd his Hopes, and press'd the War with greater vigour, levying Forces in hat hat his

T.

re-

m-

m-bo

b-

ner

ht

ng

ar,

ny

ck

ues

to

Ke-

me

geful

ru-

he

100 eir

ich

ar,

of

im his nis atThrace, whereby he so streightned the Byzantimes, that on the side of Europe they durst not look abroad: So that, in a word, being thus trustrate of their sairest Hopes, and hardly streighten'd and in danger from all Quarters, they fell at length to deliberate how they might fairly deliver themselves.

Cavarus, King of the Gauls, happen'd to be at that time in Byzantium, who greatly coveting to be a means of composing these Hostilities, most readily and with great Affection offer'd his Mediation between Prufius and the Byzantines; whereupon they agreed to commit their Differences to his Arbitrement. When the Rhodians came to understand this Negotiation of Cavarus, and that Prufias had yielded to a Treaty (tho' they would much rather have profecuted their first purpose) they dispatch'd however Aridices their Ambassador to Byzantium; but at the same time order'd Polemocles with three Triremes to make the best of his way thither, to offer to them first. as 'twas faid, their choice of Peace or War.

Upon the Arrival of the Ambassadors, a Peace in short was concluded, Hieromnemon Cothon, the Son of Calligiton, being present: The Terms of the Treaty with the Rhodians were, viz. That the Byzantines should exact no Toll from any Ships that Traded into the Pontic Sea. On which consideration, the Rhodians and their Allies oblig'd themselves to preserve Peace with the Byzantines. As to King

H.

zan-

urst

ing

ird-

ar-

OW

be

CO-

To-

Ai-

ind

to

nt.

his

nad

ch

ley

lor.

r'd

he

rft,

, 1

101

it:

MS

at.

he

he

es

to

og

King Pruhas, the Articles of the Treaty with him were, That there should be perpetual Peace between Pruhas and the Byzantines: That the Byzantines should never lead any Army against King Pruhas, nor Pruhas against the Byzantines: That Pruhas should make restitution of the Lands, Towns, People and Prisoners that had been taken during the War Ranfom-free: Furthermore, that he should restore such Vessels as had been taken at the beginning of the War; all the Arms that were feiz'd in their Magazines, together with all the Timber, Marble, Brick, Tyle, and all whatsoever Materials had been carry'd away: (For Pruhas apprehending the approach of Tibites, had caused to be difmantled all fuch places as might be of use to the Enemy) and, in a word, oblig'd himself to cause restitution to be made to the Mysians, who were under the Dominion of the Byzantines, of all that had been taken from them by any of the Bithynians. Thus was the War enter'd upon and determin'd, that fell out between King Prufias and the Byzantines.

At the same time the Cnossians sent Ambasfadors to the Rhodians to demand the Ships that Polemocles had Commanded, together with four Brigantines, which they had lent them towards the War. This being effected, and the Vessels arriving in Candia, the Eleutherneans believing themselves to have been outrag'd by Polemocles, who to oblige the Cnof-

Cnoffians, had caus'd Timarchus, a Citizen of theirs, to be flain; having first publickly proclaim'd their Right to demand reparation of this Violence of the Rhodians, declar'd War against them. There happen'd likewise, some time before this, a strange Adventure to the Lyttians, or rather an incurable Calamity. To set down therefore, in sew words, a State of the Assairs in Candia in those Days, take them a little more or less, as follows.

The Cnossians and Gortinians being in league, had by combining their Forces, subdu'd the whole Island of Candia, the City of Lyttis only excepted; which standing singly out against them, and resusing to submit to their

Domination, they agreed to make War upon them, resolving totally to destroy them, to the greater terror of those who should meditate the like Designs. Whereupon the rest of the Candiots in general sell on the Lyttians. But it was not long before a slight occasion (as is the custom of that People) set them at variance amongst themselves; so that Factions were form'd, and Seditions grew between them. The Polyrrhenwans, the Creetwans, the Lampwans, Oryans, and Arcadians lest the Cnossians; and by common Consent took part with the Lyttians. In Gortinea, the grave and experienc'd Inhabitants favour'd the Cnoffians; but the younger fort taking part with the Lyttians, begat great Disorders in the City, The Cnossians terrify'd at these Com-moth

L H

pro-

On of War

fome

the .

mity. State

take

gue,

the

t a-

heir

pon

to edit of ion

at

ai.

een

ms,

he art

ve

of-

he

n-

(je

motions among their Allies, procur'd an Aid of a Thousand Men from the Ætolians; whereupon the Payty that sided with them, getting the Cittadel, gave it into the possession of the Cnossians and the Ætolians; and after having slain some that oppos'd them, and pursu'd some, and terrify'd the rest, they gave them up the Town likewise.

The Lyttians, in the mean time, led their Troops into the Enemy's Country, while the Cnoffians getting notice of their Expedition. march'd and furpriz'd their Town, which they had left with little or no Guard: The Women and Children they fent to Cnoffus. but the Town they burnt and totally destroy'd, exercifing all the Spight and Cruelty practis'd'in the most raging War, and so return'd home in Triumph. When the Lyttians came from their Expedition, and beheld the Desolation of their City, they were struck with that horror, that not one of them adventur'd to fet his Foot within the Walls; but marching in a Body round the Ruines, celebrated as it were by their Cries and Lamentations the Obsequies of their Native Place, and then march'd away to the Lampeans, who receiv'd them with all hospitality. So that in the space of only one Day, they were banish'd their Country, which they had ntterly loft, and receiv'd as free Citizens into another, with whom they incorporated, and profecuted the War against the Cnossians. Thus * Thus Lyttia, a Colony of the Lacedamonian the most ancient City of Creet, the Mother of a People furpassing all the rest of that Island in Courage and Virtue, was destroy'd and disappear'd (as one may say) in a mo-The Polyrrheneans and Lampeans and, in short, all the rest of the Confederated feeing the Cnossians have recourse to the Are lians for Succours, whom they knew to be Enemies to King Philip and the Achaian dispatch'd their Ambassadors to these to sollicite Aid, and make Alliance with them; with whom entering into Confederacy, they feet them four Hundred Illyrians under the Command of Plator, two Hundred Achaians, and an Hundred Phocians. The arrival of the Recruits wrought a great Change for the bes ter in their Affairs; for they foon prevailed with the Eleutherneans, Cydoniates, and Aptereans (whom they had confin'd within the Walls of, their Towns) to enter into the League, and abandon the Interest of the Cnothans. In a word, the Confederates following the Advice of the Polyrrbenæans, fent to King Philip and the Achaians a supply of five Hundred Candiots, the Cnoffians having fome time before fent a Thousand of their People to the Ætolians. Thus they interchang'd Supplies one with another to continue the War. At the fame time the Gortineans, who were in Banishment, getting pof fession of the Port or Haven, and surprizing mians.

lother

f that troy'd

e mo-peans.

rates

Etr

to be

aians,

folli-

with fent

Cont

and

thek

bet-

ail'd

Ap.

the.

the

the fol-

fent

y of

ing

heir

ter-

nti-

ne-

oof

ing

hat

hat of the Phæstians, from thence they ineffed and wag'd War with those of their own City. In this posture, at that time, stood the Affairs of the Island of Candia.

At the same time Mithridates declar'd War against those of Sinope, which became, in effeet, the occasion of all those Calamities that afterward befel that City. Upon the Sinopeas demanding Succours of the Atolians to fulfain the War, the Atolians made choice of three Persons for that Service, to whom they distributed the Summ of about one Hundred and forty Thousand Drachma's, wherewith to purchase Supplies of all things needful for the defence of the place. With this the faid Agents made provision of ten Thoufand Vessels of Wine, three Hundred and Sixty Pound weight of Hair-Cordage, an Hundred and Twenty Pound of Nerve-Cordage, a Thousand Suits of Arms, giving their Ambassadors in Money about Three Thousand Pieces of Coin'd Gold. They likewife furnish'd them with four Machines for casting of Stones, with Men skilful in the use and management of them; whereupon having receiv'd this Supply, the Agents return'd Those of Sinope apprehending left Mithridates should Besiege them by Land and Sea, that Fear gave occasion for the extraordinary Preparations they made. Sinope is fituated on the right Hand as we Sail toward Phofis in the Pontic Sea; it stands in a Peninfula, POLYBIUS's General History Vol. II B into the Sez. The Town fills the whole breadth of the Peninfula, which is join'd to the Continent of Afia, by a neck of Land ne half a Mile broad. The rest of the Peninsula advances, I fay, far into the Sea, and being every-where Low-Land, the Town lies expos'd to be attack'd from that fide. The tremities of the Seaward are with difficulty approach'd, where scarce a single Vessel can with fafety adventure to the Shoar; and there are but few commodious Places there for Landing.

Those of Sinope then fearing Attempts of Mithridates both by Land with Machines. and to the Seaward by landing and possessing the level and lower Grounds which lie new the City; they therefore resolv'd to fortify the whole Circuit of the Peninsula towards the Sea; accordingly they barricado'd all the Avenues with a good Palisado, and the same fear advis'd them to furnish every proper place with Arms, and a sufficient Garrison where it was thought needful. In short, the extent of the Ground is not great, and may be defended by a small strength.

While these things were thus agitating at Sinope, King Philip march'd out of Macedon at the Head of an Army, (for there we broke off our Discourse, when we were relating the Transactions of the Consederate War) which he lead through Thesfaly, and the Kingdom of

Epirus;

作品 e out

whole

d to

d net

infula

being

S CX-

e ex

culty

Can here

for

S of

ines,

Ming

near

rtify

ards

the

ame

oper

ifon

the

nay

at

don oke

the

ich

of

ш;

Boirus; purpoling by that way to fall on the Etolians. But in the interim Alexander and Derimachus having found Men wicked enough for their Defign, plotted to surprize the Town of Ægira by Treachery, for which fervice they affembled twelve Hundred Ætolians. drawing them together at Oenantia, a Town fituate on the other fide the Water, over-against the place we mention'd, where they made provision of Vessels and all things ne-ceffary for their Defign, and there waited the occasion to put it in execution. For this Service certain Ætolian Fugitives were found, who had made their Residence some time in that place, and had taken notice that the Soldiers, who had charge of the Ægian Gate, kept but a careless Guard, minding nothing but Drinking and their Pleasure; they had therefore frequently given Dorimachus intimation of what they had observ'd; and knowing him to be fit for fuch Projects, invited him to ingage in the Attempt. Ægira is situate in that part of Peloponnesus that is wash'd by the Waters of the Corinthian Gulf between Agium and Sicyon, standing on high Ground, and by Nature strong and hard of Access. Town looks towards Parnassus and the Towns adjacent, and not a Mile distant from the Sea.

In a word, Dorimachus, when Matters were ripe for execution, Embarks his Troops, and arriving by Night came to Anchor near the River that runs by the foot of the Hill where94 on the Town stands. Alexander and D machus, together with Archidamus, Son Pantaleon, at the Head of a good Body Ætolians, attack'd the Town on that fi which regards Ægium; while one of the s gitives (well acquainted with all the Avenue at the Head of a small Party of their brave and most knowing Men, took his way on the Rocks and Precipices, and getting Passa into the Town by a certain Aquæduct, priz'd the Guard that had charge of the Gu yet afleep; which having put to the Sword and forcibly broken down the Barrier, the open'd the Gates to the Atolians, which they heedlesly enter'd without any precauti on, taking for granted they were now Ma sters of the Place. But this precipitation of theirs turn'd to their destruction, and gare the Inhabitants the opportunity of rescuire their Town. In a word, the Ætolians be lieving themselves now sure of Success, stood but a finall space under their Arms in the Market-place, but purfuing their natural lose of Plunder, began by degrees to Disband, and fell to pillaging the neighbouring Houses, it being now broad Day. The People of the Town were so terrify'd at this Surprize, that all who were in their Houses, which the Ene my plunder'd, betook themselves to slight and got out of the Town, giving all for lost to the Ætolians. But those whose House had not been yet rifled, having more leifure 1 Der

Son

ody

the F enne

brave y ow

Paffa

2,

Gur Sword

, the which

ecanti W M

ion d

gave cuin

us be flood

n the love and.

es, it

f the

that

Ene ight,

loft

oules

fore

to

bethink themselves, and coming out to make Head against the Enemy, hasten'd to the Cittadel; where their Number increasing wery moment, their Resolution augment proportionably. While on the contrary the Atolians grew weaker and weaker, through the Avarice of those who incessantly left their Ranks to hunt after Booty; by which means their Numbers and their Courage became greatly diminish'd. When Dorimachus began to perceive the Danger that threaten'd his Party, he endeavour'd to rally and recall his fcatter'd Troops, and march'd to Attack the Cittadel; making account that the boldness of the Attempt would fo terrify the Multitude, that were drawn together for the Defence of that Fortress, that they would incontinently fly before him. But the Agirates otherwise minded, animating one another, oppos'd themselves bravely against the Enemy, and advancing to the Charge, came manfully to the Sword's point with the Ætolians. For the place being without any confiderable Works about it, the Contest was for the most part at hand, and a Combat as it were of Man to Man: And, in short, the Dispute we may imagine was fuch, as when on the one part Men fight for the Liberty of their Country, and their Families; and on the other, for their Lives and Safety. But the Ætolians at length began to retire, and the Ægirates as warmly to pursue them, when they once perperceiv'd them to give Ground. The greatest part of the Ætolians then fell on the place, or were crowded to Death in the Gate. In conclusion, those of them who were not kill'd on the Spot, perish'd among the Rock and Precipices by which way they endes your'd to escape. Some that gain'd their Vessels having basely quitted their Arms wondring at the sortune of their Escape, immediately Embark'd and made Sail away. Thus those of Ægira having lost their Town through their Negligence, had the Fortune to recover it by their Resolution.

At the same time likewise Euripides (whom the Ætolians had fent to the Ælæans for their General) having plunder'd the Territory of Dyma, Phara, and Tritæa, return'd to Elis with much Booty. As to Micas of Dyma, who was at that time the Achaian Prætor's Lieutenant, he affembled all the Forces of Dyma, Phara, and Tritae, and advanc'd after the Enemy, who was now retreating. But pursuing with more Precipitation than Prudence, he fell into an Ambuth, where he fulfer'd fome loss; about forty of his Men being flain, and two handred taken Prisoners. Enripides, exalted by this Success, soon after took the Field again, gaining a Fortress be longing to the Dymaans, call'd Tychos, standing very commodiously. This Place, as Fables fay, was built by Hercules, at what time time he wag'd War with the Eleans, and was his retreat when he made Inroads on the Enemy.

. 16

real

place,

not ock

ides.

rms

cape,

Way.

heir

the luti-

hom

heir

y of

Elis

or's

of

But

ru-

ful-

ing Eu-

ter

be an-

nat

me

Those of Dyma, Phara, and Tritaa, who had met with fo ill Success in their pursuit of the Enemy, beginning to be in pain for the future, (after the taking the Fortress of Tychos) dispatch'd Advice to the Prætor of the Achaians, imparting to him what had befallen them. and demanded speedy Succours; each of them apart sending afterwards their Ambasfadors with Instances to the same effect. But it so happen'd, that Aratus could make no Levies of Strangers, inafmuch as in the Cleomenic War, they had withheld part of the Pay that was due to those who had serv'd in their Army. And Aratus himself was, in a word, but a very flow Mover in all Military Deliberations and Enterprizes. And that was it that gave Lycurgus opportunity to surprize Atheneum of the Megalopolitans; and afterward (as we have noted) to Euripidas to get poffession of Gorgona of Telphussa.

When those of Dyma, Phara, and Tritaa perceiv'd they were to expect no Relief from Aratu, they resolv'd in their Assemblies to contribute no surther to the Consederate Stock, but to raise Forces of their own for their proper Desence; so they listed three hundred Foot and sifty Horse, which they sent to the Frontiers. In this Determination it was agreed by every one, that they had done very wifely for themselves, but very ill for the Confederacy and Common Cause of the Achaians. But a great part of this Failure may justly be imputed to the Prætor, whole custom it had been to amuse and deceive them by his Coldness and Procrastinations, the their Affairs were never fo preffing. But 'tis. in short, incident to People in Danger, that while there is hope of Aid from their Confederates and Friends, their greatest Reliance and expectation of Support is from them; but those Hopes once lost, and streightned by Adversity, they become driven to apply Remedies of their own, and convert all their Strength to their fingle and particular Safety. Wherefore there feems to be no blame due to the Phareans and the reft, for having made Levies for their own defence, while the Achaian Prætor fail'd them. But they are not without imputation of having done amis, in refusing to contribute however to the Common Stock of the Confederacy. And as there is no doubt but their care for themselves in particular was just; so while they were able, they were indifpensibly bound to contribute to the General Concernment of the League; especially confidering that by the Articles of the Treaty of Alliance, they were to be repaid, whatfoever they should contribute, and what was of further weight, they themselves were the Authors of the Confederacy of the Achaians.

G one

While matters were thus transacted in Pelepennesus, King Philip, having march'd through Theffaly, came to Epirus; where after he had incorporated the Epirot Supplies, who were to join him with his own Troops. together with three hundred Slingers that had been fent him from Achaia, and three hundred Cretais, who were supply'd by the Polyrrheneans, he continu'd his march; and having cross'd the Kingdom of Epirus, he came to the Frontiers of Ambracia: And in case he had made no delay, but had led his Army directly into Ætolia, and fallen by furprize wish fo ftrong a hand on that People, he had in all likelihood given a period to the War. But the Epirots being instant with him to fet first down before Ambracia, he by that means gave the Enemy time to fortifie and provide Thus the Epirots preferring for themselves. little private Gain, to the general Benefit of the Confederacy, their passion to get Ambracia into their hands, incited them to labour that Philip might make the Siege of that Place his first Enterprize, coveting nothing more than to win Ambracia from the Ætolians, which nevertheless they saw not how it could be effeded, without first becoming Masters of Ambracium, a Fortress of good strength, having a strong Wall about it, and standing in the midst of a Morass that surrounded it on all fides; to which there is but one strait access or passage, being a Causey made of Earth brought G 2 thither

ae to made baian

LI

ery ill

use of ailure

whole

them

tho'

t 'tis,

that fede-

e and

ed by

Re-

their

fety.

but

hout ng to k of oubt cular were Ge

ially eaty tfo-

s of Au-

hile

100 POLYBIUS's General History Vol.II.

thither for that purpose. In short, this Place stands very commodiously for insesting the Country of the Ambracians, and the City it self: Wherefore Philip, by persuasion of the Epirors, sat down before it, and disposid things for the Siege.

Scopas, in the mean while, at the head of all the Ætolian Forces, takes his march thro' Thessaly, and falls into Macedon; where pasfing the Plains of Pieria, he ravag'd the Country without opposition: And after having taken much Plunder, he march'd toward Dium; which Place being deferted by the Inhabitants, he difmantled, burning the Portico's belonging to the Temple, and destroying all the Ornaments, and whatever was of use to the People when they affembled to celebrate their Festivals. He likewise spoil'd and threw down all the Statues of the Kings of Macedon: And he, who from the beginning of these Troubles, and in his first Expedition, made War not on Men only, but against the Gods, was, on his return home, not only not cenfur'd as an impious or facrilegious Perfon, but honour'd as a Man of Merit, and a good Servant of the Commonwealth; and (by the promise of further success he made them) much animated the Ætolians, who now concluded none would dare to approach their Country in a hostile manner, while they themselves pillag'd with impunity not only Peloponnesus, but Thessaly and Macedon it felf. King

King Philip foon receiv'd advice of this Invafion of his own Kingdom; and tho' he endur'd with pain the Obstinacy and Ambition of the Epirots, nevertheless he resolv'd to continue the Siege of Ambracium: And when he had perform'd all that could be expected in the like cases, and had terrify'd the Inhabitants by his Works and Approaches, at length took it on composition, after a Siege of forty Days. So turning out the Ætolian Garrison, consisting of about five hundred Men, who by Articles were to fuffer no ill treatment, he gave Ambracium to the Epirots, and thus gratify'd their Ambition. This done, he leads his Army along the River Charadra, with purpose fpeedily to pass the Gulf of Ambracia, where it is narrowest, near the Temple of the Acarnanians, call'd Actium. This Gulf comes out of the Sicilian Sea, and parts the Kingdom of Epirus and Acarnaria; the Mouth is but narrow, being little more than half a Mile broad; but; it foon widens, and is in fome places twelve Miles over, stretching in length about forty Miles in, from the Sicilian Sea, running between the above-nam'd Countries. Epirus is on the North-side, and Acarnania on the After he had pass'd this Gulf with his Army, he took his march through Acarnania, and drew towards Phærea, an Ætolian Town; and recruiting his Army with two thousand Acarnanian Foot, and about two hunty it n of pos'd d of

I.II.

lace

the

hro' pafthe haard Inrtiing ule eleind

of ing on, the erl a

de 10 ch ile

ot

g

POLYBIUS's General History Vol. II.

hundred Horse, he invested that Place; and after many vigorous Attacks, for two Days together, the third it capitulated, the Are lian Garrison marching out with their Baggage, as it was articled. The following Night, there arriv'd five hundred Ætolians, who came to the relief of the Place, thinking it had been still their own. But the King receiving an account of their march, possess'd himself of certain advantageous Posts in their way; and falling on them, cut of the greatest part of them, taking the rest Pris'ners, a very few only escaping. Then after he had distributed thirty Days Corn to the Army (the Gramries of this Town being very well replenish'd) he march'd towards Strategica; and coming within little more than a Mile of the Place, he encamp'd by the River Achelous ? From thence continuing his march, he ravag'd the Country round about, no Enemy appearing to withstand him.

About this time the Achaians, beginning to feel the ill effects of the War, hearing the King was at hand, fent their Ambassadors to wait on him, and demand Succours. These found him near Stratus; who when they had done their Commission, represented how profitable an Enterprize it would be to march to Rhium, and fall by that way on the Ætolians. After Philip had given Audience to the Ambassadors, he did not presently dismiss them; but holding them in hand, told them he would deli-deliberate on their Propofals: So decamping, he march'd the Army to Metropolis and Conope. At Metropolis the Ætolians held the Citadel, but quitted the Town, which the King deflroy'd, and so prosecuted his march to Conope.

In the mean time the Atolian Horse were got together, and boldly refolv'd to attempt the obstructing his Passage over the River, about two Miles from the Town, believing they should be able either to hinder his pasfing, or at least to do the Army much damage in the attempt. But the King, who had knowledge of their Purpose, commanded the Buckler-Men first to enter the River, and to approach the other Bank by Troops or Cohorts well cover'd with their Bucklers, after the Tortoife manner. These Orders being obferv'd, as they gain'd the other Shoar, the Ætolians attack'd the advanc'd Party, and in truth made some dispute; but when they obferv'd these to halt, and to draw into close order, and that the fecond and third Cohorts joining them, compos'd as it were a Wall of Defence with their Bucklers; they then gave back, and retreated into the Town, despairing to perform any further Service.

After this occasion, the Ætolians presum'd no more to come into the Field, but shut themselves up in their Places of Defence. After the King had pass'd the River, and spoil'd all the low Country without opposition, he advanc'd to Itheria, a Place fortify'd and

frong

; and Days Eto Bagowing olians, nking King

ol. IL

ffess their eatest very triburana-(b'd) ming e, he ence ntry vith-ning the 's to hefe had oro-1 to

ans. mm: uld eli-

104 POLYBIUS's General History Vol.II.

ftrong by Art and Nature, and standing in the way of his march. Nevertheless, on the approach of the Army, the Garrison thought it best to retire and abandon their Works. Thus becoming Master of this Place, he order'd it forthwith to be dismantled and demolished, commanding his Troops that ravag'd the Country far and wide, to do the like to all the Fortresses they could get into their hands.

After he had pass'd this Streight, he mov'd by easier marches, the better to enable the Soldiers to carry their Plunder. Then having furnish'd the Army with all things necessary, he led them towards Oeniade, and by the way fitting down before Paanium, (which Town he resolv'd to be first Master of) he took it by force, after many Affaults. was a Place of no great extent, being hardly a Mile about, but no way inferiour to the others, as well for the Beauty of the Buildings, as the Strength of the Wall and Works. He caus'd the Fortifications to be raz'd, and the Edifices to be demolish'd, taking order with the Timber and Rafters to make Floats to transport himself to Oeniade. The Ætoli. ans feem'd at first refolv'd to fortifie and keep possession of the Citadel of that Place; but on the approach of King Philip, the fear prevail'd; fo they quitted that likewife. the King was become Master of Oeniade, he march'd into Calydonia, where he invested a well-fortify'd Place, having a strong Wall, and in the

II.lo

ie apght it

Thus

r'd it

lish'd,

the

II the

b'von

e the ving

Cary,

the

hich

) he

This

irdly

the Buil-

orks.

and

order

loats

toli. кеер

t on pre-fter , he ed a

Vall,

and

and which was well furnish'd with Stores and Provisions of War. For King Attalus it seems had fupply'd the Ætolians with all things needful to the Defence of this Town : But Philip taking it by force, the Macedonians wasted all the Country of Calydonia; and afterwards he march'd back to Oeniade. The King having well consider'd the commodious situation of the Place, as well for the passage it gave into Peloponnesus, as other Advantages. resolv'd to fortifie and begirt it with a Wall. Oeniade is fituate on the Sea, upon the very out-skirts of Acarnania, where it borders on the Ætolians, at the entrance of the Gulf of Corinth: it stands fronting towards Peloponnefus, and lies opposite to the Coast of Dyma. and not diftant above twelve Miles from the Country that borders on Araxus; wherefore he fortify'd the Castle, and laid the Design of joining the Arfenal and the Port, and destin'd for that Service the Materials he had caus'd to be transported from Pæanium,

But while these Things were under considemtion, he received Letters from Macedon, whereby he understood that the Dardanians believing he had taken his march into Peloponnefus, had refolv'd to fall on him at home: That they had levy'd Forces for that Enterprize, and were making great Provision of all kinds for profecuting the War. Whereupon judging it but just to repair to the relief of his own Country, he therefore dismisseth the Achaian

chaian Ambassadors, giving them assurance That as foon as he should be able to compose his Affairs at home, there was nothing more in his Thoughts than to come and give then his utmost Assistance. Whereupon he de parted, marching with great diligence back by the same way he came. At his passage of the Gulf of Ambracia, in his way out of Acar nania into Epirus, he was met by Demetriu of Pharus, who had been compell'd to fly out of Illyria by the Romans (as we have already noted) having only one fingle Veffel with him. The King receiv'd him kindly, ordering him to go first to Corenth, and from thence to take his way through Theffaly, and come and meet him in Macedon.

After Philip had pass'd through Epirus, he continu'd his march without halting; and on his arrival at Pella, a Macedonian Town, the Dardanians, who had got intelligence of his return, by certain Thracian Fugitives, terrify'd at his diligence and fudden appearance, dismis'd their Army, after they were got near the Frontiers of Macedon. Whereupon having notice that the Dardanian Army was broken, he dismiss'd the Macedonians that were then with him, to go and gather in their Harvest, passing himself into Thessaly, to fpend the remaining part of the Summer at Larissa. About the same time, Paulus Amilius triumph'd magnificently at Rome, for his Victory over the Illyrians: And Hannibal,

after

trance

mpol

them

back

age of

Acar.

Y out

ready

With

ering

ce to

and

, he

d on

the his

fri-

nce,

got pon

was hat

neir

to

at his

sal,

ter

after taking Saguntum by storm, march'd his Army into Winter-Quarters. The Romans now assur'd of the loss of Saguntum, sent Ambassadors to Carthage, to demand the delivering up of Hannibal; but did not in the mean time respite their Preparations for the War, having created Publius Cornelius Scipio, and Tiberius Sempronius Consuls. But forasmuch as we have treated at large of these Occurrences in our preceding Book, we only give here this hint thereof, a little to resresh the Reader's Memory, and to the end contemporary Assure may be the better understood. And here we are come to the end of the First Year of the Hundred and sortieth Olympiad.

The Ætolians having in their Assembly created Dorimachus Prætor, he was no sooner feated in his Authority, when affembling their Troops he led them into the upper Epirus; where he acted all the Violences of War, not so much now in prospect of Profit to him. telf as in Malice to the Epirors. And on his arrival near the Temple of Dodona, he there burnt and demolish'd all the Portico's, spoiling the Ornaments, and destroying in short the Temple it felf. Thus the Atolians, careless of what is practis'd in time of Peace or War. acted fuch outrageous Parts in both Peace and War, as shew'd them ignorant of the Rights and Customs of human Nature; persisting to execute what they had once resolv'd without regard regard to Gods or Men. As to Dorimachu. after he had done all the spoil he could, he re turn'd back to Ætolia. And now albeit the Winter was not yet over, and the Season as forded no hopes of King Philip's returning ye awhile: that Prince notwithstanding, taking with him three thousand of that fort of Troops they call Chalcaspides; from their carrying Brazen Shields; two thousand Buckler-men, three hundred Candiots, and about four hundred Horse; with this Body of Men he de parted from Lariffa, and took his march through Theffaly, and so to Eubaa, and thence by Cynus to Corinth; marching by the Frontiers of Bæotia and Megara; and in short perform'd his Journey with fo great fecrefic and expedition, that the Peloponnefians had not the least notice of it. On his arrival at Corinth he caus'd the Gates of the City to be immediately clos'd, and placing Guards on all the Avenues, fent the next day to Sicyon for the elder Aratus, and dispatch'd Letters to the Achaian Prætor, and the several Towns of Achaia, requiring them to let him know, how foon they could be able to affemble their Troops, and to affign a place of Rendezvous. This done he continu'd his march towards Diescurium a City of Phliasia and there encamp'd.

At this time Euripidas having with him two Cohorts of Eleans, and certain Pirats and mercenary Strangers, amounting in all to about

achu.

he re

it the

on af

ng ya

taking

roops

rying

-men,

hun-

e de

narch

nence

Fron-

fhort

crefie

had al at

o be n all

w for

s to

is of how

heir

ous,

ards

en-

nim

and

1 2-

out

bout two and twenty hundred Men: With these Troops he departed from Psophis, taking his march by Phanice and Stymphalia, (ignoant of King Philip's return) with design to attack and plunder the Territory of Sicyon. But so it chanc'd, that the same Night that Philip encamp'd near Dioscurium, he march'd by, leaving the King's Army fomewhat in his Rear, expecting the next Morning to fall on the Sicyonians. But his People lighting on certain of the Candiots, who had been commanded out to Forage; by these Prisoners Euripidas got notice of the arrival of the Macedonians. Whereupon he march'd back with his Troops without imparting his Intelligence to any Body, taking the same Road by which he came, purposing to prevent the Macedonians, and take possession of the Rocks and Ground beyond Stymphalia that commands the Passage. The King, who knew nothing of his Design, departed the next day as he had purpos'd, with intention to march by the Town of Stymphalia it felf, and so to Caphya; the place appointed for the Rendezvous of the Achaian Troops.

At that very inflant then, that the Vanguard of the Macedonians came to the foot of the Mountain Apeaurus, not a Mile from the Town of Stymphalia; the Van of the Eleans in like manner approach'd the same Ground: Which when Euripidas perceiv'd, and by what he was told, and by reasonable conjecture

Aure became throughly fatisfy'd that it w fo : he takes with him a Party of Horse only and to get himself out of danger, escapes in Plophis, passing over Rocks and By-ways, better to conceal his flight. The rest of his Troops beholding themselves abandon'd their Leader, and being astonish'd at the for prize, stood a while to consider what was be to be done: For the principal among then were at first of Opinion, That it was only Party of Achaians that had been drawn togs ther, and came to the relief of the Country: Then perceiving they bore brazen Shields, they took them for Megalopolitans: For i feems that People had made use of these Arm in the Battel that had been fought with Che menes near Selafia, Antigonus having so or der'd it. So that keeping themselves in good Order, they continu'd their March, and with assurance approach'd the Mountain. they no fooner became certain that they were Macedonians, when quitting their Arms, they betook themselves to flight. About twelve Hundred of them were taken, some cut in pieces on the place, and many perish'd among the Rocks and Precipices; and, in a word, not above one Hundred of the whole Party made their Escape: So Philip sending the Prifoners and the Booty to Corinth continu'd his march.

This Victory pass'd for a kind of Miracle among the Peloponnefians, the news of Philip's

Coming

Coming and Conquering being told at one and the same time. After he had travers'd Arcadia, and furmounted the Hardships of the Snows, and Difficulties of the Ways, he arriv'd in three Days at Caphya. Here the King halted for two Days to refresh his Army; then taking with him Aratus the younger, with the Achaian Troops which he had there drawn together, amounting to Ten Thousand Men, he march'd the Army toward Plophis by the way of Clitoria, seizing on the Arms and Ladders in all the Towns in his march. Plaphis is confess'd by all without contradiction to be the most ancient City of Arcadia: Its lituation, with respect to Peloponnesus, is in the heart of that Country; with respect to Arcadia it stands on the West-borders thereof. towards the Achaian Frontiers, in the Neighbourhood of the Elean Territory, with whom at that time they were in League. Hither Philip arriving in three Days from Caphya, Encamp'd on certain Eminences that lie fronting the Town; from whence there is an easie prospect (out of all danger) both of the Town and Neighbouring Villages round about. From hence then taking a view of the great strength of the place, he grew in doubt what to determine; for on the West side there runs a rapid Stream, which during almost all the Winter is no way fordable: This on that fide fortifies the Town, and by the depth of its Channel, renders it almost inaccessible, the then only a togo

it w e only

pes h

s, the

of h

n'd

ne fur

as bef

For it Arms Clea

good with

But Were they

welve ut in mong

Party Pri-

d his

racle ilip's ming

POLYBIUS's General History Vol. 11

Waters falling from on high, having in process of time worn it to great depth. On the East-side runs the Erymanthus, a great and violent River, whereof many Tales are told and are in every ones mouth. On the South fide, where the Torrent empties into the B. rymanthus, the Town is environ'd with many Waters, which give it great strength on that Quarter. As to the other part that regards the North, there stands an Eminence very strong by Nature, and exceedingly improve by Art; and this Work ferv'd them for Citadel. Furthermore, the Walls and Works about the Town were considerable both for height and structure. And over and above all this, the Eleans had furnish'd the place with a good Garrison; and Euripidas, who had escap'd in the late Deseat, was in the Town.

When Philip had well weigh'd all there Matters, fometimes he refolv'd not to adventure to Besiege them; but soon again he became of another Mind, when he reflected on the great Importance of the place: For as it greatly annoy'd at that time both the Achaians and Arcadians, so it was a Rampier and Bulwark of the Eleans; he forefaw that were it once in his possession, it would become an admirable Fortress whereby to cover the Arcadians against the Insults of the Enemy, and an excellent place of Arms and retreat for the Allies, who made War on the Eleans. Where-his he became at length refolv'd to attempt the Siege ; and ordering his Troops to refresh memfelves, and to be in a readiness under heir Arms by break of Day, he commanded them to march down and pass the Bridge over the Brymanthus ; which they did without my Impediment, none fufpecting they would adventure on fo hardy an Enterprize: Then bravely approaching the Town, they came and lodg'd themselves at the foot of the Wall; Upon this, Emipidas and all within the Town were firuck with great Terror and A. mizement, having always concluded it most improbable, that the Enemy would ever be hadventurous, as to make an effay of their Strength against a place so well fortify'd and provided a nor to refolve on a long Siege, by resion of the Winter and bad Weather. vertheless, with these Thoughts were mix'd main Jealoufies among themselves, and an apprehension lest Philip should become Master of the Place by intelligence. But thefe Fears were foon over; and after they found there was no ground of Suspicion of that, there being none so much as inclin'd to Philip's Party, they then unanimoufly betook themlives to the defence of the Works, the greatof part of the Garrison mounting the Walls, while the Elean Mercenaries made a Sally by a Gate in the upper part of the Town, texfurprize the Enemy on that side. mean time, the King having appointed three Seve-2017

fore

pro n the t and told outh-ola

ne B. many that gards

very fvor for a orks

1 for bove place who

the thek ven-

e beon as it chai-

and were e an Ar-

and the erefore

POLYBRISH General History Vol.

feveral Attacks, ordered Ludders to be a by People defined to that particular Ser gainst each affign'd place, with a sufficie Guard of Macedonians to fiffain them : Th eommanding to found to the Charge, the advanced to the Affault on all Quarters of the Town. The Garrison for a space made bram refillance, cashing down many of their Las ders. But it coming to pass that their Dam and other Weapons of Defence in fuch on fions, beginning to fail them (for they we drawn to the Walls in hafte, as was noted and the Macedonians bravely maintaining the Attack, notwithstanding the opposition the found, new Men boldly succeeding and fi ling up the places of those who had been of from the Works; that the Townsmen. longer able to withstand them, deserted the Detence, and betook themselves for safety n the Citadel So the Macedonians mounts and became poffes'd of the Wallsq while the Candiots, who were come to Blows With the Party that had made the Sally, beat the back, and in the purfuit enter'd pell-mell with them into the Town ; whereby it fo chance that the place was fubduld and taken in d Quarters at once. The inhabitants, will their Wives and Children likewife took Sin Quary in the Citadel, as did Euripidas, and all that had time to provide for their ale ty.

reve

arts

ted)

4.6

Sec.

char

LYIN

ntel

e the

bi th

the

aned

in d

Wi

Si

s, and

ale.

.7/198

r cell

The

The Maccionians were no looner Mafters of the Town when the fell to plunder and both publick and private Places, where Orders. In she mean while, those who had mir'd to the Citadel, forefeeing what must inevitably befal them, having nothing there to fultain them, deliberated on yielding it ans accordingly they fent a Trumpet to the ling, who gave them his Pass for the securiof those whom they should appoint to Treat; who were the principal Men of the Gry, and with them Euripidas, who obtain'd ledemnity for all who were retir'd to the Ciudel, both Towns-Men and Strangers. Neentheles, the Deputies were order'd to return back, and there to remain till the Arany should be drawn off, left some of the unonly Soldiers, less observant of the King's Commands, should be tempted to rifle them. The Weather being bad (much Snow faling) the King was constrain'd to take up his shode here for fome days, where affembling the Achaians that were with him, he first ofcours'd with them touching the fituation the Place; that it was well fortify'd, and great use to them in the War they had on their hands. Then repeating the affurances whis fast Friendship to the Nation in geneal, he bestow'd the Town upon them, telling them, he was fully determin'd to give them all the affiftance in his utmost Power, H a

116 POLYBIUS General History Vol

and would let no occasion pas, whereby a might express his a section to them. As Aratur, and the rest of the Arbaians is express'd their grateful Acknowledgmen for so many Favours and good Offices, the King dissolved the Assembly, and march'd the Army away towards Lasion; upon which the Psophidians left the Citadel, and came dominto the Town to their respective Habitations. As to Buripidas, he departed them to Corinth, from whence he went to Assolution of the Magistratus of the Arbaians gave the Government of the Citadel to Proslaus the Sicyonian, placing therein a good Garrison, and Pythias they made Governor of the Towa Thus were Matters accommodated at Psophis.

The Elean Garrison in Lasson receiving notice of the approach of the Macedonians, the being informed of what had pass dat Psass, deserted the Town; into which the King in mediately enter'd; on his arrival, to give further instance of his Kindness to the Achieves, he made them a Present likewise of the Place. He also restored Stratus to the Telephussians, which the Eleans had abandon's, and, in short, in sive Days marcht to Olympia, where after he had sacrific'd, and magnificantly treated the prime Officers of the Acmy, and allow'd three Days to repose and result his Troops, he march'd them into the Territory of the Eleans; where he no sooner enter'd, when

here

e di

COWE.

g im-give Action white Ter

on'd

mpis,

cent

emy,

efreih

rito

ter'd.

when

en he fent Deuchments abroad to wafte and plumber the Country, himself encamping the Naghbourhood of Artemissium, whiter having ordered the Booty to be brought, afterwards return'd back to Dioscurium. And here, the they put all to Fire and Sword where ever they came, and took many Prifuers; nevertheless, the greater part sav'd themselves by flying to the neighbouring Towns and Places of Strength. For the Termory of the Eleans is the best Peopled Country of all Peloponnesus, and the most abounding in all things; for the Inhabitants are for the most part so in love with a Country Life, that how Wealthy foever they are, they canbe drawn from thence to inhabit their Towns.

The reason of this seems to be, that the Government greatly incourageth that fort of Life, whereby their Lands become better cultivated and improv'd; infomuch as they receive from them all kind of Protection, and want no Privilege or Support it can give them. For my own part, I can easily believe they have been ever heretofore addicted to that manner of Living, as well through the fertility of the Soil, as the innocence and fimplicity of the Manners of the ancient Inhabitants, while by the general confent of the Greeks they enjoy'd their Possessions without any Molestation; or fear of War or Violence;

H 3

щ

POLYBIUS General Hiftory Vol

in confideration of the Olympic Games the

But after the Arcedians had now Challen a right to Laffon and Pifa, and they were come oblig'd to take Arms to defend the Possessions, they became changed in the Manners, and forgot the ancient Customs their Country; without thought of recovering their old Liberty, and have long comand for the most part in that state. When in, Imethinks, they manifest a very stupie neglect of their own proper Benefit, and the Advantage of Posterity. For since Peace is Bleffing which Mankind in general ask d the Gods; and for the fake whereof there is hardly any thing we are not ready to do to fuffer; and fince among all those things that bear the name of Goods of Human Life, that alone remains undisputed; does it not feet a mighty Error then, and blindness of Mind that while this Bleffing may be honeftly obtain'd, and perpetually enjoy'd to despife such a Treasure, and not esteem it a Felicity prefemble to all others? But let it be Objected That fuch a fort of Government would expen them to the infolence and injuries of those who should have a mind to make War or them, and violate their Faith. But this can but very rarely come to pass, and the gene ral fense of fuch Violences, and the ready Succours of the whole Greek Nation would Coop Pati

the

COVE

conf

Aupil

d the

e Bi

sk 🕻

ere is do

s this

chat

feet

Mind.

y ob

fuch

pre-

aled,

xpok

thole,

ar on

CI

gene

cady

rould

foon

monedy fuch an Evil And after all thes being the certain Product of long their Money, whereby to strengthen themelves, and Garrison their Places of Defence; while now in these our Days, out of a vain fear of what is very unlikely ever to happen, heir Jealousies one of another beget nothing but War and Violence; and the mutual De-Ametion of each other. We have thus lightly touch'd this subject in our way, to give a hint only to the Eleans of their proper Intereft, and the rather inalmuch as they can never hope to fee a more favourable conjuncture, whereby to regain their loft Rights and Priileges, In a word, if the Eleans chance at this Day to retain any kind of preference to sheir ancient manner of Country Employments, it feems to be no other than fome faint remains of their old Customs, which are not yet quite extinguish'd.

Hence then it came to pass, that when Rhilip fell in upon them, so many Prisoners were taken, and yet that so many notwith-standing made their escape into their Towns. To the Fortress of Thalamé especially many relorted, where they secur'd much Cattel, and great quantities of their Moveables; that Place being strongly situate, and the Avenues difficult, and standing remote from all Commerce, and almost every way inaccessible. But when the King became inform'd, that many

H 4

Dany of the Enemy had resir'd thick thought himfelf oblig'd to attempt (at his best) to dislodge them : Wherefore havi first gain'd all the difficult Passes, where his Army might march with fecurity, hel his Baggage in the Camp, guarded with good part of his Army, and taking with him only his Buckler-men, and light-arm'd Troop march'd through the Defiles which lead to wards Thalame. Those who were within the place, terrify'd at his approach, having been but little conversant in War, and wanting very thing for their defence; and there being great numbers of the baser fort of Peop mix'd with them, foon fubmitted, albeit ther had a strength with them of two hundred Mercenary Soldiers that had been brou thither by Amphidamas an Officer of the Eleans.

As foon as Philip was Master of Thaland and the Booty they had there lodg'd, toge ther with five Hundred Men, who were made Prisoners, and much Cattel of all forts, here turn'd back to his Camp. And now his Are my being over-charg'd with Booty, whereby they became greatly hinder'd in their march and all Military Expeditions, he found it no cellary to retire further, and re-encamp at Olympia.

Among the Tutors and Governors left by Antigoniu to King Philip, who came a Child to the Crown, Apelles was one, who had

ereb

ith a him oom

d co

n th

been og e cing copia cher deal ught

- (0)

and

oge

nade

e m

An

rch.

ne

by hild

had

orc.

d a powerful influence over the young rince. This Person then having conceiv'd be to the flate decine the Thefalians then were, began his Delign by means malicious enough: For the seem'd to him, that the Theffalians were free People, and liv'd in the enjoyment of all their Rights and Liberties, and their Condinon quite otherwise than that of the Macede mer ; nevertheles, he was therein deceived for there was little or no difference between them, the Theffallans living liable to the fame ulage with the Macedonians, being obliged to do and fubmit to every thing the great Men of the Ringdom thought fit. Now forafmuch seles bent all his Thoughts towards the compassing his Design, his first eslay was on the Patience of the Achaian Soldiers, who av'd at that time in the Army ; he theree caus'd the Macedonians frequently to diflodge them, and possess their Quarters, when they found them at any time better provided than themselves and often to deprive them their Plunder. In a word, he caus'd them to be severely treated by the common Executoners on every flight occasion: And if at time they complain'd, or the Soldiers sp-Treatment, he caus'd them to be taken into Caffody a conceiving, that by this fort of ufige, he should be able, by degrees, and unofferv'd to bring the Achaiums to bear by Cuflom

POLYBIUS Gonza History Vol.

from any burthen the King fould think &

Thus Apelles was not without hope compassing his purpose, from his having erv'd, that heretofore in the time of Antiaus, the Achaians cheerfully underwent me Hardships, to purchase their exemption from the Authority of Cleoners, But fo it chan that certain Achaian Soldiers, provok'd this Usage, assembled themselves, and we and imparted the Project and Practice of a pelles, to Acatus: Who thereupon apply bimfelf to the King, to obtain a Remedy for this Evil ere it got a head Philip now form'd of what had been done, call'd the Soldiers to him, and gave them affirence the care should be taken for the future, that fuch Injury should be offer'd them, bidding them rely on his Word; and accordingly order'd Apelles to determine nothing at an time about the Acheian Soldiers, without ful communicating with their Prætor, or Chi Officer. Thus Philip acquir'd a mighty he putation, not only among his lown Subject but throughout all Pelopomefus; as well by his manner of Treatment of the Allies in the Camp, as by his personal Courage, Vigilare, and Abilities in Was And in crush it would have been hard to find a Prince to whom N ture had been more bountiful in those Gift and Qualities, that are found necessary to the acquisition of Power and Empire : His U derstaning Was clear, his Memory excellent Perfort and Fathion bere she Majelly sheld; but his brightest Vertues were his folution and Military Abilities. But in re-ad it would be too long a digression, to reent here how it came to pals that he loft le excellent Character, and from a great ing became a Tyranc; we will therefore rethat Story to a more proper place.

ing Ant

n fiv

han

k'd

nd w

e of

apple

edy

OW I

d the

ce the

has n gly i

at a

ut fe

Chi

ty la bjeck

in de

POUR TO AR

tetli

a Un

rftan-

King Philip then decamping from Olympia, arch'd towards Phare, and foon after came Telphuffa, and from thence to Heraa, where caused all the Booty to be fold. Here he der'd a Bridge to be made over the River Alwhereby to facilitate his passage into Territory of the Trypbolians. At the fame hand Dorimachus Prector of the Atolians, fent and of Phylidas, to the Aid of the Bleans, who had demanded Succours against shole that wasted their Country. Phylidas on his urival joining five hundred Mercenaries to his Troops, who were lifted into the Ale Pay, and adding to them a thousand of one City-Bands, together with certain Tarenthes, march'd to the relief of the Tryphalians. Boy call'd Tryphalur: It stands in the Maritime parts of Pelopownefus, between the Bleans and Messenians, looking towards the Lybian Sea, on the skirts of Achaia towards the North-West, The Towns of this Country are Samicum, Leprents, Hypena, I) was, Pyrgus, Appun, Bolase, Seydlagium, a Phrysia. The Eleans having of late days for dience, to which they added Alipheras, has tofore an Arcadian Town; and Magalopolis felf, by the procurement of Aliandas, whi the Soversignty was in his hand, which a negotiated by way of exchange, for or tain Reafons best known to him and th Eleans.

The King being now quit of his Plunder and Baggage, passing the Alpheus which re by the Walls of Herea, came to Alipheran. This Town is feated on an Eminence, which lies fleep and floping every way, being afcent of above a Mile to the top, where fland a Fortress, in which there is a Statue of Bris Excellence of the Workmanship. The Interbitants themselves can give no very clear to count why it was there plac'd, nor at who Charge it was done. But as to the Workmen, all conclude it to have been wrough by the hands of Hecatodorus and Softratus and that it is the most beautiful and nish'd Piece they ever perform'd. Philip beving order'd those who carry'd the Scaling-Ladders to be ready by Day-break, at certain places affigu'd them, fent his Mercenaries before, and to fuftain them a Body of Macedonians, giving them Orders to begin ys fa r. Oli r, ho polis

-

lund

h n

ber

white

ing

Stant Brai

nd ill

Inh

ear so whole

Work

ough

ation

od A

ip 🗺

Son

Mer-

Body

begin

ier to monot the Hill, at the inflant uppear'd above the Horizon : Which hiom were punchually and with great Replace haftening to that part wherethey faw reduitate in greatest number, gaveahe ing opportunity at the head of a Party of cho-Mento pais unobserved by those of the Forover certain broken Grounds full of Rocks Precipios: From whence giving the Signal ey approached with their hadders to mount works Philip himfelf first enters, and res polleffion of an unguarded part of the ace, which he immediately fets in a flame; whereupon those, who were defending the Wall, beholding all on fire terrify dat the Dunger they faw so near them, and fearing they should lose the Citadel, which was their Refuge forthwith abandon'd the Defence Stheir Wall, and haffned thither. Whereupon the Macedenians became prefently Ma-ders of the Works and the Town. But those who were retreated to the Gitadel, foon fent the King, and, on composition for their lives, yielded it up. This Success spread lear throughout all the Country of Tryphalia. and every one began to deliberate how to preferve themselves and save their Country.

ma, and committed fome Spoils on the Allies, retir'd to Lepreum. For in those times, the Confederates of the Etolians were accuflom'd,

found, the in Amity, not only to he them deferred in their greatest firstes, but the first themselves to the plunder'd and being by them; and endured at their hands (w could be fear'd from a conquering Enemal Those of Typenes gave up their City to the Philips and the Hypanicans follow'd the example. In the mean time, the Phialis having understood what pair'd im Trypholic detecting the Artim League, resolute book possession of the Palace, where the Palace marehs or Magillrates relided. As to Billian Pilferere, who held their abode Phialis, with defign to spoil from thence of Lands of the Messenians, and were as the almo consulting about enterprizing something on the Phialium shemfelves; when they can to understand that the Inhabitums were force by Force, they thereupon change their purpose, and after having taken certain Security of those of the Town, they march out with all their Baggage; whereupon the Phialians dispatch'd their Deputies to the Ring, giving their Town and Country up to his diferetion.

During these Transactions, the Lepress attempted to force out of the Okadel, the A rollians, Elvans, and the Troops that had been fent to their relief by the Laced wmonians. But Phr ED-H

folia

e P

to

odes

at the

certa

archil

to 1

up m

been

But

Phy

first fet light by this their Arning refelved to do his bell to pro-Town in Obedience, and service bitants But on Philip's fendin with past of the Army towards Phil began to fink; whereupon the Loprons more affird and did an Action in decation wery memorable. For albeit were Agriculate time in the Town fand Blotili, five hundred Brolians and hundreth Lace demonitus; and the Gradel and above in their hands , they had nehelefs the Refolution to enterprize the deing of their Gountry, and would not con-to betray themselves by a shavish Fear or miffion. 21 Wherefore Phythdas perceiving dizens determination march'd togewith the Eleans and Lacedamonians out he Town; as to the Cretons, who had ent by the Spartiate, they return'd by way of Me fine to their own Country, and Unlidas retreated to Samicum, As foon as they dispatch'd their Deputies to Philip smake tender of their City, and put it into his hands. After the King had given them Audience, he dispatch'd a part of his Troops deprea; and continu'd his march with his backler-men, and light-arm'd Troops, being determin'd to attack Phylidas; who (with the loss of all his Plunder and Baggage) was, the King specially scame, and meaning a siew of the Place is and sending this Order the rest of his Troops to join him for Lepres, made countenance of resolving to frege it. Whereupon the Electric and Electric and the waste and the send of the waste and the head nothing but the base Walls to trust began to capitalise; for it waste greed to should march out with their Arms; for whence they went to Electric Thursthe His became Master of Samicain. And now up the Supplication of the Towns round about the received them all into his Brotection; a namely, Phrysia, Styllagium, Spia, Bala Frega, and Epitalia, and so match back a Leprea, having in the space of fix Days on pass'd the Reduction of all Topphalia to the Obedience.

13

After some Conserence with the Leprensus futing the time and occasion, he put a Gradel, and led his Army to wards Heraa, leaving Ladiem the Acard with his Governour in Tryphalia. Upon the arrival at Heraa, he order'd the Booty to divided and distributed to the Soldiers; an after he had victual'd the Army, and supply'd himself with all things necessar, he departed from Heraa, being then miswinter, and march'd towards Megalipilis.

g to Æ

While Success thus waited on the Arms of King Philip in Tryphalia, Chilon the Lacedaenian, conceiving the Right of Succession to Crown to be in him, and not longer able to fuffer the lajury that had been done him by the Ephori, (who in his wrong had preferr'd ruft stempt fomething towards doing himself and the lastice. Wherefore being persuaded he free hould win much on the People, if by the exmple of Cleomenes (and many others) he wip them hopes of a new division of the lands, he by that means meditated how to only at his Enterprize in effect. After he had Both imparted his purpose then to his Friends, whereof there were no less than two hundred, who engag'd in the Conspiracy, he resolv'd to be a lose no time. But forasmuch as he well hew, that Lycurgus and the Ephori Who had eprese deded him, were the main Impediment, he for attack'd them, and surprizing the Ephorical street at Table, kill'd them there. Thus dearns of Fortune bring those Men to suffer what y to be consider either the Actor, or the Action, is; an account but be consess'd their end was just, and Ater they had dispatch'd the Ephori, Chilon cession. Intens to the House of Lycurgus, but chanc'd galer to be disappointed; he, by the help of galer friends and Servants being secretly control away, making his escape to Pellene, by pivate ways, unknown to his Enemy. And While now now tho' Chilon fail'd of effecting the me important part of his Enterprize, and h but an indifferent prospect of Success; new theless, he was under a necessity of pro cuting what he had began. Wherefore ing into the Market-place, he there attac and kills all he could find, whom he knew be his Enemies; greatly animating his Friend and Relations, and giving fome hopes to But beholding at length wh Multitude. he had done all, that few or none took p with him; on the contrary finding hims in danger, he fecretly withdrew and deputed; taking his way through the Territory Laconia, and so escap'd into Achaia, who he liv'd as a banish'd Man.

The Lacedamonians apprehending the proach of King Philip, secur'd their Essein the Country, slighted Athenaum of a Megalopolisans, and dismantled the Works

Thus the People of Sparta, who had led liv'd in the injoyment of fo excellent a for of Government, from the time that Lycurge gave them their Laws; and who held fo gra a share of Power and Reputation till the Ba tel of Leudra, sell at length (when Fortal had forsaken them) into deplorable Calanties. Their Reputation diminish'd every day intestine jarrs vex'd and tormented them, a der colour of dividing their Lands, till the end they were brought so low as to so mit to the Tyranny of Nabis, who heretoso coul world not brook to hear so much as the Name and by Tyrant. But enough has been said by onever hers on the subject of the ancient Laceda-ptole serians and their Actions, and every Body ore go knows what besel them, as soon as Cleomenes attack and subverted the establish'd Laws and Form knew of their Republick; nor shall we omit to Friend take further mention of them as occasion to the state of the st Himse Winter , having acquir'd a Reputation much depart weater than his Age promis'd, through the ritory many, noble, and early Actions he had always, whe mady perform'd. In the mean time, Apelles (of whom we have already spoken) had not the sp o given over his Project as to be without Effect opes, as was plainly seen, of bringing by of the grees the Achaians Necks to the Yoke. Works but he well knew that Aratus, both Father had lossed Son, withstood his Design, and that the a son sing held them in singular esteem, especially Lycurge the Father, who had been in great Reputation of the well and was known to be a the Bray powerful Man among the Achaians; Fortunal the King himself, I say, valued him for Calam a Prudence and great Abilities. Wherefore ery day feelles refolv'd to attack these two, and by hem, a find and address do his best to ruine them , till th King Philip. Pursuant to which, he eretofor its, and all who among the Achaians were could be a first of the second of th

132 POLYBIUS's General History Vol.

of the opposite Faction and being well in structed in their feveral Interests and Cha racters, he fends for them to Court; and a their Arrival, employs all his Arts to win an engage them to his Friendship, acting in the Favour with the King, whom he labour'd h perfuade, That if he continu'd to treat the Aratules with fo much Deference, he con never hope to gain any thing on the Achain further than what was stipulated by the Ari cles of the Confederacy. But if he should please to countenance and encourage those he should recommend, he would foon compain whatever he defir'd, and difpose of all Me ters in Peloponnesus at his pleasure. Further more, the time of Election of their Protor drawing nigh, he resolved to do his bef to conferr that Dignity on one of his our Party, and to diminish by all means possible the Power of the Aratuses Administration, a being in no wife proper for his use in the Pur he had to act; whereupon he prevail'd with the King to go as it were in Progress to & gium, and to be present at the Achaian Alfembly. So Philip follow'd his Counfel, and fail'd not to be there in due time; when Apelies by Threats on the one hand, and Persuasion on the other, compass'd with great difficulty the Election of Eperatus the Phe rian, to the Prætorship, in preference to The moxenus, who had been fet up by Aratus.

cll in

CH

nd on

n and the rd n

Com.

Arti

hould

ofe he

mpas

Mg.

rthe

Prz

s bet

OW

offibk

n, B

Pan

with

D. A.

w Af-

1, 20

where

, and

great

Phe

o Th

Soon after, the King departed from Ægimarching the Army towards Patræ and Dymas, and came to the Fortress of Tichos, which stands on the Borders of the Dymaans, and whereof, as hath been elfewhere observ'd. Exipidas had been long before posses'd. The King then being very desirous to win back this Castle, and restore it to the Dymans, enemp'd with the whole Army by it; whereon the Elean Garrison within became so terrily'd, that they quickly deliver'd it up. This place, tho' but fmall, is exceeding strong; it is not in circuit above a Furlong, but the Walls are not less than five and fifty Foot high. So the King restor'd it to the Dymaans, and then led his Army into the Country of the Eleans, wasting and plundering far and wide; and after he had loaden the Soldiers with Booty, return'd back to Dymas. Apelles, who began now to think he had advanc'd far in his Enterprize; having obtain'd an Achaian Prætor of his Faction, he renew'd his Attempts on the Aratuses, being determin'd totally to destroy their Interest with the King. He pursu'd them then with Calumnies, which he thus manag'd: Amphidathe chief of the Eleans, who had been taken Prisoner at Thalamé, (whither he was retir'd, as hath been told) being brought among others to Olympia, so wrought by the mediation of Friends, that he was admitted to a Conference with the King; in which Au-

Soos

134 POLYBIUS's General History Vol.11

Audience he perfuaded him, That it would be no difficult matter to procure him the Friendship of the Eleans, and that he we knew by what means to effect it, and make that People covet his Alliance. The Rim being wrought to believe him, forthwith di charg'd him without Ransom; impow'ring him to affure the Eleans, That on condition of their ent'ring into League with him, their Prisoners should be enlarg'd Ranson free: That he would protect their Country from Plunder, and all the wasteful effects of War, and confirm and preserve their rightful Liberties, fo as they should live in the entire enjoyment of all their Privileges, and be esempt both from Garrisons and Tribute. And now albeit these Overtures contain'd so much favour, and might be thought sufficient to engage them; nevertheless, the Eleans would not be drawn to liften to them, but remain immovable.

This incidence arm'd Apelles with Calumnies against the Aratuses, who charg'd then with Insincerity to the King, and that the did not, as they ought, serve the Interest of the League in which they were engag'd win the Macedonians, telling the King, if the Eleans had shewn any aversion to his Friendship, it was wholly due to the Artistices of the Aratuses: That, in short, upon Amphilomus's departure from Olympia towards Eleans took an occasion to have Conserved.

with him, and so prevail'd, that he became of another Mind, and chang'd his Purpose; being by them persuaded, That it would be in no wise for the Interest of the Peloponness, that King Philip should acquire any Power over the Eleans; and that this was the case why the Eleans receiv'd the King's Proposals so coldly, and persisted in their Confederacy with the Ætolians, and endur'd so patiently the Mischiess they suffer'd from the Macedonians.

As foon as Philip had heard these things, he order'd the two Aratuses to be sent for, to the end he might confront them with their Accuser, who should be oblig'd to charge them to their Faces with these Matters, whereof they had been accus'd to him in private. Whereupon they came and heard what Apelles had to fay; who charg'd them roundly and with great affurance, and a Countenance full of Menaces; adding, in the King's Presence (who had not yet spoken) That since the King had discover'd their Ingratitude to him, and that they had render'd themselves so unworthy of his good Offices, he had therefore deliberated on calling an Assembly of the Achaians, to whom he would impart the Caufe, and then return with his Army into Macedon. Whereupon the elder Aratus reply'd, praying the King not over-hastily to give credit to what he heard; and that whenfoever he should stand accus'd of any Matters to him, by any Friend

of the

of T

Would

m de

e we make

Kin

th di

w'rin

dition

m, 1

nion

ountry

ects of

gheful

entire

c d.

mud

ent to

would

nain'd

alum

them

the

eft d

With

ne B

riend

And

rence with

36 POLYBIUS's General History Vol.

Friend or Ally, he would vouchfafe to ff and examine every thing with Caution, before he came to believe a Calumnious Impeach ment against him: That furthermore, as & became the Justice of a Prince so to do, so the thing in it felf was advantageous to him That in the mean time, it would be but fain dealing in Apelles to eause those Persons to be produc'd who were Witnesses to the Confe rence, whereof he had been accused, and the Person likewise himself who had given Apeller the Information: That, in short, nothing ought to be omitted, whereby the King might arrive at the certain Truth of the Mat ter, before he should determine to discover any thing thereof in the Assembly of the The King became of Aratus Achaians. Mind; and reply'd, That he would not in any wife resolve hastily, but would carefully first inform himself in every particular of the Matter; and thereupon difmis'd the Company. Not long after this Controversie (over and above that Apelles never produc'd any Proof of the Accusation) a chance happen'd, which greatly favour'd the Cause of Aratus. Amphidamus falling under suspicion of the Eleans, about the Time Philip was wasting their Country, they had therefore form'd a Defign to fecure his Person, and sending him Prisoner to the Ætolians. But he having fome fuspicion of their Purpose, withdrew himself, and escap'd first to Olympia; afterwards to fit before

peach

, as it fo the

him

t fair

tobe Confe

id the

pelles thing

King

Mat

cover

the

tuis

t in fully

the

npa-

over

anv

n'd.

tus. the

ing

d a

mic

ing ew er-

rds

wards being inform'd, that the King intended to remain some Days at Dymas, where he divided the Booty, he departed from thence. and came thither to him. Aratus was well pleas'd with the Escape and Arrival of Ambidamus; he therefore with the affurance of an innocent Man, pray'd the King to order him to be brought to his Presence, who without Controversie would be best able of all others rightly to inform him, he being a principal Person to whom the Secret was said to be imparted, adding, That there could be no doubt of his Sincerity in the Relation he should give, considering he had been compell'd now to abandon his Country on the score of the King, and had no other recourse but to him. This Request of Aratus was thought but reasonable; wherefore Amphidamus was brought to the King, by whom the untruth of the Acculation was made to appear. This prov'd the occasion that the Good will of King Philip grew now more and more towards Aratus, whom he held in very great confideration; and, on the contrary, of his change towards Apelles, whom he came by degrees to dislike: Howbeit, he dissembled that and many other things all he could, through the long possession of Power he had acquir'd with him.

136 POLYBIUS's General History Vol.

Friend or Ally, he would vouchfafe to fi and examine every thing with Caution, before he came to believe a Calumnious Impeach ment against him: That furthermore, as to became the Justice of a Prince so to do, so the thing in it felf was advantageous to him That in the mean time, it would be but fair dealing in Apelles to eause those Persons to be produc'd who were Witnesses to the Confe rence, whereof he had been accused, and the Person likewise himself who had given Apeller the Information: That, in short, nothing ought to be omitted, whereby the King might arrive at the certain Truth of the Matter, before he should determine to discover any thing thereof in the Assembly of the Achaians. The King became of Aratus Mind; and reply'd, That he would not in any wife refolve haftily, but would carefully first inform himself in every particular of the Matter; and thereupon difmis'd the Company. Not long after this Controversie (over and above that Apelles never produc'd any Proof of the Acculation) a chance happen'd, which greatly favour'd the Cause of Aratus. Amphidamus falling under fuspicion of the Eleans, about the Time Philip was wasting their Country, they had therefore form'd a Design to secure his Person, and sending him Prisoner to the Ætolians. But he having fome fuspicion of their Purpose, withdrew himself, and escap'd first to Olympia; afterwards before

peach

as it

fo the

him it fair

tobe

Confe

id the pelles

thing

King

Mat cover

the

itui's

t in fully

the

npa-

over

any

n'd,

tus. the

ing

da

min ing ew er-

rds

to fif wards being inform'd, that the King intended to remain some Days at Dymas, where he divided the Booty, he departed from thence, and came thither to him. Aratus was well pleas'd with the Escape and Arrival of Ambidamus; he therefore with the affurance of innocent Man, pray'd the King to order him to be brought to his Presence, who withant Controversie would be best able of all others rightly to inform him, he being a principal Person to whom the Secret was said to be imparted, adding, That there could be no doubt of his Sincerity in the Relation he should give, confidering he had been compell'd now to abandon his Country on the score of the King, and had no other recourse but to him. This Request of Aratus was thought but reasonable; wherefore Amphidamus was brought to the King, by whom the untruth of the Acculation was made to appear. This prov'd the occasion that the Good will of King Philip grew now more and more towards Aratus, whom he held in very great confideration; and, on the contrary, of his change towards Apelles, whom he came by degrees to dislike: Howbeit, he dissembled that and many other things all he could, through the long possession of Power he had acquir'd with him.

In the mean time, Apelles neglects not to pursue his Design, prevailing to have Tauring who was Governour for the King in Petopos nelus, to be remov'd from that Trust; not by any Acculation he preferr'd against him, but more artfully by praifing his Abilities, and that it was for the King's better Service have him present with him in his Wars and Expeditions; when his meaning was, to have it in his Power to provide a Governour of his own framp in Peloponnelus. Thus by the new way are Praifes converted into Calumnies, and Men are undone by Recommendation. A malicious refin'd Artifice, forg'd and put in practice by those who live in the Courts of Princes, the effects of Jealousie and Ambition. Furthermore, Apelles took all occasions to diminish the Credit of Alexander with the King, who had the Command of his Guards, to the end he might have it in his Power likewise to dispose of that Place, and to conclude all in a word, bent his utmost Endeavours to introduce a total Change in the establish'd Order of Government, which had been left by Antigonus; the' that Prince, while he liv'd, rul'd the Kingdom and the young King with great Wisdom, and at his Death provided as wifely for every thing. For in his Will he left his Reasons to the Macedonians, of the whole Method of his Conduct, and laid down Rules and Prescriptions for their future Government; appointing to whom et ton

mrien

topor

ot by

, but

, and ce m

s and have

of his

this

lum-

enda

d and

the

and

k all

nder

of his

n his

and,

molt

e in

hich

nee,

the

his

ing.

Ma-

Con-

ions g to

OM

when the administration of Affairs should be committed; and aiming by all means possible to mettle the Kingdom, as to leave no motive of Differtion or Discord among the Minifters and others, whom they should employ. Wherefore he nominated Apelles for one of the young King's Tutors, who at that time was jointly trusted with him in other To Leontius he gave the Com-Matters. mand of the Buckler-men; Megalea was made Secretary : Taurion was appointed Governour of Pelaponnesus; and Alexander had the Command of the King's Guards.

But in conclusion, Megalea and Leontius being Creatures of Apelles he dispos'd them as he pleas'd, and therefore fet all his Arts at work to remove Alexander and Taurion from Authority, that himself might have the Power, or execute it by instruments of his own; all which Designs, he had in great likelihood brought to pass had he not engag'd in that fecret War with Aratus. Wherefore he came at length to feel the fmart of his Folly; and reap'd the Wages of his Ambition; it being his Lot to fuffer those Evils he was preparing for others. But we will not profecute his Story here, but leave to another place the recital of the manner and reasons of all that befel him, it being now time to put an end to this Book.

140 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. II.

In conclusion then, after these things were brought to pass, which we have been relating. King Philip return'd to Argos, where he spent the Winter among his Friends, sending in the mean time his Army into Macedon.

Finis Lib. IV.

POLYBIUS'S General History

PM 15 of the property of the say Val

OF THE

TRANSACTIONS

OF THE

WORLD.

Vol. II. Book V.

HE Year of the younger Aratu's Prætorship expir'd about the time of the *rising of the Pleiades (for * The before the Achaians computed) who ginning of was succeeded by Eperatus; Dorimachus holding then that Trust in Ætolia. About the same time Hannibal, having openly declar'd War against the Romans, departed from New-

Carthage, and passing the River Eber, enters his march towards Italy. While at Rome T berius Sempronius was dispatch'd towards frick, and Pub. Cornelius Scipio towards Sp at the Head of their Armies. Furthermon Antiochus and Ptolomy coming to despair by Conferences and Embassies to compose the Differences that were grown between them bout the Lower Syria, had likewise enter'd in to Hostility one with another.

As to King Philip, he coming to want Mo nev and Provisions for his Army, had convocated by their Magistrates the Assembly of the Achaians; which according to custom was held at Ægium. Where perceiving Aratus (ill fatisfy'd with the Practices of Aprile) had willingly refign'd his Authority; and finding Eperatus unqualify'd for business, and in no esteem with the People, he came at length to discern the foul play of Apelles and Leontius, which renew'd his efteem for Are tas, whom he now consider'd more than ever. Not long after, having prevail'd with the Magistrates, that their next Convention should be at Sicyon, he there had private Conference with the two Aratus's; and imputing all that had pass'd to the Artifices of Apelles, pray'd them to forget their Wrongs, and contique him in the same degree of Affection as heretofore. Whereupon coming to a new Accord, the King went to the Assembly, where

none

r by

the

ma

d in

Mo

nvo-

y of

Was

atus 3

and

and

e at

and 4ra

Ver.

the

ion

on-

ing

lles,

no

25 ew

ly,

ere

ner's where without difficulty he obtain'd by their procurement all he defind towards the furthreace of his Affairs. The Achaians then coved, That as foon as the Army should be adanc'd to the King, being three Months pay the Army; together with Ten Thousand Measures of Corn. And it was also further wolv'd, That while the King made War in Person in Peloponne sus, he should receive seventeen Talents Monthly. After these Acts of the Assembly they separated, and retir'd to their respective Cities.

And now, when the Army began to move from their Winter-Quarters, it was resolv'd by the King in Council, to profecute the War likewise by Sea: concluding it to be the only means whereby to furprize and attack the Enemy from all Quarters, by making descents and invading them, where their Towns were distant and remote from Succour; whereby every one would be oblig'd to confult their own fingle Safety through the uncertainty of their Motions, and it would be in their power to carry their Arms with more ease, whithersoever they should judge it most expedient; for they had to do at once with the Ætolians, Lacedæmonians, and Ekens. After this had been refolv'd, the King order'd the Fleet, both his own and the Achaian Ships to Rendezvous at the Port of Lechawww, where he commanded the Soldiers of the Macedonian Phalaux to be exercized and infiructed in the use of the Car; for the Macedonian apply themselves cheerfully to everthing, and learn with facility whatsoever the go about. And, in short, are no test brain and active by Sea than by Land. No People indure Hardship better, or are more patient of Labour, whether to be in their Fortifications and Encampments, or any other pains of hardy Employments incident to the Life of a Soldier. In conclusion, Hestod seems to give us their Picture in his Character of the Eacides.

Ma-

To whom Soft Base and Lust less Pleasure yield, Than Martial Toils and Perils of the Full.

While King Philip and the Maredonian remain'd at Corinth, employ'd about the Naval Preparations; Apelles who could no brook the diminution of his Credit, nor work any change in the Mind of his Maker, enter'd into Compact with Leoneius and Megoleas; with whom it was agreed, that they on their part, who were to act in the Army about the King, should labour with their beat Arts secretly to thwart and obstruct him is all his Designs; while he making his about at Chalcis, would take care so to shorten and retard his Supplies of every thing from all Parts, that he should be so streighten'd on the

ainfil

Life of

ms w

of the

cofun

Field

oniak

their

d not

Work

r, co

Mega

they

Arm

ir belt

im in abode

n and

m al

'd 04

that

that fide, that the want of Necessaries to the advancing his Expeditions should be a great impediment to his Progress. After Matters had been thus concerted between them, this cafty old Courtier foon found reasons whereby to dispose the King to approve of his Voyage to Chalcis, whither he went; and where he perform'd Articles so punctually with the other two, that he brought the King under such streights, that he became constrain'd to pawn his Plate to supply his Wants. As foon as the Naval Army was drawn together, and it was thought the Macedonians were now fufficiently exercis'd, and instructed in the masagement of the Oar; the King, causing Bread and Pay to be distributed to the Soldiers, embark'd with Six Thousand Macedonians, and Twelve Hundred Mercenaries, and steer'd his Course towards Patra, where he arriv'd the next Day after his departure from Corinth.

About the same time Dorimachus the Ætolian Prætor dispatch'd Agelaus and Scopas with Five Hundred new rais'd Candiots to the Aid of the Eleans. For these being under some apprehension that the King had some design on Cyllene, had taken Foreign Troops into their Pay, and levied others of their own Subjects, and took care to Fortify and Garrison that Place. Wherefore Philip composing a Body of all the Stranger-Troops, of the Achaians, the Candiots that were with him, some Gaulish Horse, and Two Thousand choice Achaian Foot, put them into Dyma: both for a referve, if occasion should require and to strengthen and secure that Place in cale the Eleans should have a mind to attempt any thing that way. Then fending his Difpatches to the Mellenians, Epirots, Acarnani. ans, and Scerdilaidas, requiring them to haften with their Ships, and meet him at Cophalenia, he parted from Patræ at a Day prefix'd, and came to Pronos a Port of that Island. Where observing the very great difficulty of fucceeding by laying fiege to that Place, the Country about it being very streight, he proceeded further, and steer'd towards the Town of Palé: Here finding plenty of Corn on the Ground whereby to fustain his Army, he difembark'd, and fat down before that Place, drawing his Vessels ashoar, and securing them with a good Ditch and Palissado, he sent out his Macedonians to Forage, while he approach'd to view the Place, whereby to make a Judgment, where he might best apply his Engine to the Walls; it being his purpose there to attend the coming of the Confederate Forces and to become Master of that Place, thereby to deprive the Ætolians of the Benefit it yielded them: For whenever they had any design of making a Descent on Peloponnesu, or to plunder the Coast of Epirus or Acarm mia, they made use of the Vessels of Cephalenia Furthermore, he confider'd this Town would make

146 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. 1

fand

ma;

uire,

CRIE

empt

Dif

ani-

ot f t Ca

pre-

land.

y of

the

pre-

OWD

the

e dif

lace,

hem

out

ch'd

udg.

ines

e to ces,

reby

t it

any

efw,

714

ALKS

ould

nake

make a fafe retreat both for himself and Friends, and be of great use to them in all their Attempts on the Enemy on that fide. For Cephalenia stands not far from the Gulf of Corintb, looking likewife toward the Sicilian Sea, and that part of the Coast of Peloponnesus, that lies North and North-West: and is in the Neighbourhood chiefly of the Epirots, Eleans, Ætolians, and Acarnanians. whose Coast trends away West and South-Weft.

This Town then lying fo commodiously for affembling the Forces of the Confederates, for annoying the Enemy, and protecting of Friends and Allies; the King was therefore very defirous to get the Island into his possesfion. After he had well confider'd that a great part of the Town was inviron'd by the Sea, and by Rocks that were inaccessible, and that there was but one small spot of good Ground lying towards the way of Zacinthus, whereby they might approach, he therefore refolv'd there to apply his Engines, and make that the principal Attack. In the mean time, there join'd him fifteen Vessels sent by Scerdilaidas; for the Commotions that had happen'd in Illyria among the Governours of those Provinces, who had fallen into dangerous Diffentions among themselves, was the cause he could not send a greater Supply. Aids came likewise from the Epirots, Acarnawians, and Melenians; for after the taking K 2 ot of Phialea, the Messenians readily took their share of the War.

148 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. 11.

And now, when all things were prepar'd and the Machines for casting of Stones and Darts in a readiness, the King order'd them to approach the Walls, after he had enconrag'd his own People, and had began to fan their Works. The Macedonians then who wrought chearfully at the Work, had foon undermin'd a great part of the Wall, strongly fustaining the Burthen with great Posts of Wood as they proceeded, whereupon the King summon'd the Town to surrender: But they having no disposition to submit, he or der'd Fire to be apply'd to the Props that festain'd the Wall, whereupon a Breach was quickly made. Then he order'd the Bucklermen, who were under the Command of L. ontius, (dividing them into Parties) to march to the Atrack, and enter the Town over the Ruines of the Breach. But Leontius, mindful of the Agreement he had made with Apel les, with-held certain forward Men, who were already advanc'd to the top-of the Breach from proceeding any further. And having before corrupted some of the principal Officen of the Army, and acting his own part but coldly, it came to pass, that after great los of their Men, they were beaten off, when they had the fairest opportunity that could be wish'd of taking the Town. When the King therefore had confider'd the backwardnes ol.H.

their

par'd,

s and

them

ncou-

to fap

who foon

ongly

fts of

1 the

: But

e or-

at fu-

Was

kler-

Le.

narch

r the

nind-

Apel

were each

ving

ficen

but

los

vhen

ould

the

ard.

nes

ness of his Officers, and that the Macedonians had much fuffer'd in this Attack, he rais'd the Siege, calling a Council to debate what was best next to be done.

While King Philip was thus bufie here, Lycureus march'd with an Army into the Territory of the Messenians, and Dorimachus with mert of the Atolian Forces into Theffaly, both with the same design of obliging the King to mife the Siege. Whereupon Ambassadors were dispatch'd to him from the Acarnanians and Messenians. Those from Acarnania propoling his falling on the Lands of the Ætoliand, fo to compel Dorimachus, by spoiling the Country, to return to their relief. But the Messenians pray'd present Succours; adding, That now while the Etefian Winds blew, they might in a Day's fail gain their paffage from Cephalenia to the Coast of Messenia: where Gorgus the Meffenian was of Opinion, they might endanger the furprizing of Lycurgus, and that the Enterprize promis'd great advantage. Leontius, who faw this Counsel tended to his purpose, strongly seconded the Advice, forefeeing that if the King follow'd it, he would spend the whole Summer without effect.

In short, it was true, that to Messenia twas a fhorr and easie passage, but it was impossible to return back during the season of those Winds; fo that in all probability should the King have follow'd that Advice, he would have been shur up in Messenia during the second of Action, without doing any thing to the purpose, while the Ætolians would be a liberty to spoil at their ease, and put all to Fire and Sword in Thessay and Epirus. This Counsel therefore was very pernicious; where fore Aratus labour'd to divert the King, shewing how much better it was to fall on the Ætolians by Sea, and that the occasion of making Descents with their Fleet was not to be lost, now that Dorimachus with the Æto-lian Forces was diverted elsewhere.

K 3

have

The King, who had already conceiv'd a doubtful Opinion of Leontius, as well through his late Behaviour in the Siege; as by other grounds of suspicion he had given him of his Fidelity, became inclin'd to follow the Counfel of Aratus: Whereupon he writ to Eperatus the Achaian Prætor to assemble his Troops, and march to the relief of the Messenians, while he himself weighing Anchor the next Day, gain'd his passage under covert of the Night from Cephalenia to Leucas; where all things having been duly prepar'd at the Ifthmus of Dioryclus, he caus'd his Vessels to be drawn over, and so pass'd into the Gulf of Ambracia, which, as we have observ'd, comes out of the Sicilian Sea, and runs far up into the Country of Atolia. Having perform'd this Journey somewhat before Day, he made fail towards a Town call'd Limnaa: Here causing the Army to take a short refreshment, and

Holo

he fe

ng to be at all to

This

here

thew-

a the

on of

ot to

Æ10

v'd a

ough

other

f his

oun-

bera-

ops,

ians,

next the all

IAL

be of

mes

nto

p,m ade

ere

nt, and

and to be in a readiness to march, and to take no Baggage with them but what they could not be without; and having procur'd flore of good Guides, he became exactly inform'd by them of the nature and situation of the Country and Towns, and instructed in every thing he had a mind to know.

Here Aristophontus the Acarnanian Prætor came to the King, at the head of all the Forces of that People; for having been heretofore great Sufferers by the Ætolians, they came with Minds full of Revenge, and to repay them in their own Coin. Wherefore they embrac'd the occasion with great joy of being thus affifted by the Macedonians; fo that not only fuch as by the Law were oblig'd to go to the War, but those who were exempted by their Age, listed themselves for this Expedition. The Epirots incited by the like Motives, were not less forward; tho' by reason of the great extent of their Country, and the fudden arrival of King Philip, they were not so well able to draw their Troops together. Dorimachus, as was noted, had led with him the one half of the Atolian Forces, leaving the other half at home, which he conceiv'd would be strength sufficient to anfwer any fudden occasion, and be guard enough to the Towns and the Country. now the King, leaving the Baggage under a good Guard, departed in the close of the Evening from Limnea; and after they had march'd K 4

POLYBIUS's General History Vola

march'd about eight Miles, he caus'd the Army to halt to take some refreshment; and after a short repast he continu'd his march, and by break of Day came to the River Actalous, his purpose being to surprize the Town of Therme.

Leontius, who had two Reasons to conclude on the probability of his Master's Succels, and that all the present strength of the Enemy on that fide would be too little to defend them; for the Macedonian Army had furpriz'd them, and came both when and where they were least look'd for, being perfuaded that Philip would not be fo prodigal of his own proper fafety, to hazard himfelf among fuch Fastnesses and Defilées as the parts about Therme abound with. Wherefore perfifting in his treacherous purpose, he advis'd the King to incamp about the River Achelous, to give some repose and refreshment to the Army after so hard a Night's march; being willing to do his best at least, that the Atolians might have some small space to be think them, and provide for their defence But Aratus, who judg'd rightly of the importance of the occasion, that it was now favourable, but would not flay; and perceiving Leontius openly now to withstand all whole some Counsel, and promising Designs, urgid Philip by no means to confent to the least delay, nor upon any reason whatsoever respite his March, the fuccess whereof lay in the difpatch.

imfelf

s the here-

e, he

River

ment

arch:

t the

o be

ence'

npor-

w fa-

iving

hole urgid

It de fpite

e difatch

he Ap patch. Wherefore the King approving his and af Advice, would not be drawn to make the harch, least stay; but after the Army had pass'd the Ache River, march'd away directly towards Therme, Town putting all to Fire and Sword that lay in his way. On his Left he march'd by Stratus, con- Arinium and Thestium; on his Right he left Suc Campe, Lyfmachia, Triconium and Phæteum: of the Then he arriv'd at a Place call'd Metapa, tle to fanding on the entrance of a Pass or Defilée had pear the Lake of Trichonium, about eight and Miles distant from Therme. Wherefore he g per took possession of that Place, which had been bedigal abandon'd by the Etolians, and strengthned it with a Garrison of five hundred Men; forecasting it might be of use to him, and be a good retreat in case he should be pres'd in his march in or out of the Defilée. For the Lake is farrounded with mountainous and broken Ground, and inclos'd every where elfe with thick and unpassable Woods, leaving no access but by this streight and difficult Passage. In thort the King order'd his march after this manner: In the Van of the Army march'd the Mercenaries, after them the Illyrians: then the Buckler-men and the Legionaries of the Macedonian Phalanx; in the Rear of all march'd the Candiots, the Ibracians, and light-arm'd Troops covering the Right; their Lest being desended by the Lake.

154 POLYBIUS's General History Volt

After they had march'd a while by Streight, they came to a Place call'd Pa phia, where the King plac'd a Guard, and profecuted his way to Therme, by a Paffin not only broken and difficult, but barne do'd and bounded on both fides by flee Rocks, and fo narrow in many places, that it Passage it self was not without danger. The Defilée, tho' at least four Miles long, Phil foon pass'd; the Macedonians marching in Soldiers in pursuit of Victory, and arm near Therme when it was now broad Da As foon as the Army was encamp'd, he per mitted the Soldiers to plunder and ravage in and wide, and to spoil and plunder both the Town and Territory, which abounded an only in Corn, and all forts of Provision and Military Stores, but in the Town was found great quantities of the most valuable Monbles of the Ætolians. For over and about that their Fairs were kept, and their Fee celebrated there, and it was the place when their Assemblies met, the Atolians had lodge both for their use, and the better securit thereof, all they had that was most precion in Therme, in confidence that there was n Place more fecure, it having never at an time before been visited by an Enemy, in by reason of its situation was held for the Bulwark of Etolia. Furthermore, through the long Peace they had enjoy'd all the How fes in the Neighbourhood, and round about

th

by the Temple abounded so much the more of Partition with costly Goods and Furniture. The Army Paffig with all forts of Plunder, and in the Morning, chusing out what was most valuable and easie y the to be transported, they made an heap of the hat the reft, and burnt it before the Camp. Phi they found in their Magazines, exchanging them for such of their own as were less servicearrivable, burning the rest to the number of above.

the per fifteen thousand Suits.

Hitherto their Proceedings were but just, age is and the War fairly made, but whether what oth the they did afterwards will bear that Name, is a ed no doubt: For calling to mind what the Ætofound were provok'd not only to burn and destroy Mon the Portico's of the Temple and all the Ornaabove ments thereof, which were wrought with Feath great Art and Expence. But not herewith where contented, they proceeded to demolish the lodg'd very Walls, and levell'd the Structure to the Ground. Furthermore, they cast down all recion the Statues to the number of two thousand, was no defacing and breaking in pieces the greatest it am part of those that were not consecrated to, or y, and creded in representation of the Gods, While or the to these they reserv'd a Respect, ingraving on proud certain Stones those Verses, that were after-How ward fo much spoken of, being written by about Samus Son of Chrylogonus, who had been educated

156 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. 11,

cated with the King, and began to give form

Dium, behold how far our angry Shafts Have piered in thy Revenge!

In short, the Desolation was such as to firike the King himfelf and those about him with a kind of Terrour, while they believ'd however that they had not over acted their Revenge, for the Sacrilegious Impieties of the Ætolians at Dium. Nevertheless, we must take the libertty to be of a different Opinion, and it will not be hard to discover whether we are in the right or no, by barely enume rating some Examples of the Actions perform'd by the Ancestors of this Prince, without feeking further. When Antigonus had overcome Cleomenes, King of the Lacedam nians in Battel, and compell'd him to fly the Land, he thereby became Master of Sparts. And albeit it was then in his Power to dispose of them, both City and People at his pleasure; nevertheless, far from evil intreating the vanquish'd, he restor'd them to their Liberty and Privileges, and giving them other Marks of his Bounty, return'd home to his Country; by which Magnanimity heacquir'd the Title of Benefactor of the Lacedamonians, and their Redeemer, after his death; and won a glorious Name not only among that People, but with the whole Nation of the Greeks.

King

Vol.II.

as to it him

liev'd

their

of the

muft

inion,

ether

ume

per-

with-

had

zemo-

the !

arts.

[pofe ure ;

van-

and

ks of

try;

le of

beir

ori-

but

ing

e fome King Philip, who began and laid the Foundation of the Macedonian Power, raising his Family to that pitch of Greatness, gain'd not more by his Arms than his Humanity, after he had vanquish'd the Athenians near Charonea. For as he subdu'd those who encounter'd him in the Field by Force, fo he reduc'd the whole City and People of Athens by his Goodness and Moderation. Nor was it his manner to give the Reigns to his Indignation in time of Hostility, nor to pursue his Enemies by Arms any longer than till he had gotten it in his Power to make them Examples of his Clemency. Thus by restoring the Athenian Prisoners without Ransom; by giving decent Burial to those that were flain, and fending their Bones by Antipater to Athens; and, in a word, by Clothing many of those that return'd home, he gave an easie Period to a most difficult Enterprize. For by this Method and Greatness of Mind, he so charmed the proud Athenians, that from Enemies they became Friends, and approv'd themselves ready to serve and affift him on all occasions.

What shall we say of Alexander afterward? Tis true, his Indignation fo far transported him against the Thebans, that he raz'd their City, and fold the Inhabitants by Our-cry, yet he nevertheless forgot not what was due to the Gods; expresly forbidding, that on no score whatever they should violate either Temple or any Sacred Thing. When he pass'd

into

158 POLYBIUS's General History Vol.

into Afia, to revenge the Outrages done h the Perfians against the Greeks; he did utmost, 'tis true, against the People, and w willing to render their Punishment propa tion'd to their Fault; but still he spar'd to Temples, and every thing that was dedicated to the Gods. Albeit the Perhans, in the Invasion of Greece, had therein principal exercis'd their Rage. Philip then ought i have practis'd according to these excellen Examples, whereby to give proof, that he di not fucceed these his glorious Ancestors less Magnanimity, than in State and Authoring But, in short, he labour'd all his Life long to give proofs of his being descended from Philip and Alexander, but too little care to imitate their Vertues. Wherefore as his Act ons had no refemblance with those of his Pro decessors, so his Reputation sell likewise short of that which they had acquir'd. And it was visible by what he did at that time; for his Indignation against the Ætolians wrough him to act the same Outrages he would be thought to punish; and, as the Saying is, m remedy one Evil with another; but he be liev'd himself in the right, when he did no more than repay them measure for meafure: And while he himself incurr'd the fame Guilt, to revenge the Sacrileges of Dorina chus and Scopas, dream'd not that he should fall under the same Imputation, and share the like Infamy. For to do our utmost to de prive propo

ncipall

ght t

ccelle

he di

les in hority.

e long

d from

care to

s Adi

is Pro

e fhort

it ws

for his

ough

ald be

is, to he be e did

mes

fame

rima

hould

re the o de prive

done prive an Enemy of his Fortresses, Towns and did Ports; and, in short, of all that can be rightand fully call'd their own; and even to pursue to destruction both them and theirs, to commis Success to our Enterprizes, is not accounard th ted Criminal, or against the Law of Arms, dicard which compel to fuch Violences. But to act n the fuch Parts as are neither profitable to our elves, nor a weakning to the Enemy; such s casting down and defacing of Statues, defroying of Temples, and spoiling the Ornaments; Who can reckon this other than Rage, and the effect of Madness? In a word, it is the Office of a Man of Honour, tho' in Hostility with the vilest Enemy, to pursue them no further than the Correction of their Faults, and the Reparation of the Injuries they have fustain'd. To distinguish between the Innocent and the Guilty, and not involve them in the same Punishment; and when he cannot discriminate between them, he ought to preferve the Guilty for the fake of the Innocent. For 'tis the Property of a Tyrant to be ever acting Mischief, and to Reign by Violence: to hate his Subjects out of Fear, and be detelted by them. While 'tis the Chancter of a King, to be Beneficent to all Mankind, to acquire the Love of his Subjects by Clemency and Acts of Grace, and fo to mapage their Minds, that he shall not more defire to reign, than they to be govern'd.

POLYBIUS's General History Vola

But Philip had no mind to walk by the wholesom Maxims; and if we reflect how the Ætolians were likely to have understood it, in case he had pursu'd a less violent cours and not profan'd their Temples, and left his other Excesses unacted; for my own part take for granted, they would have been compell'd to consider him with Veneration, 251 Prince abounding in Honour and Goodnels and would themselves have been seiz'd with remorfe, for their own Inhumanities at Dim and Dodona; while they knew it was in his power to have dealt them the like usage, but was restrain'd by Motives of Clemency and Magnanimity. Most certain it is, I say, that the Ætolians would have been driven to bluk at their own Proceeding, while they should behold King Philip, out of a truly generous and Kingly Spirit, fo mindful of his Duty to wards the Gods, while he was wreaking his Revenge on his Enemies. For what can be more Noble than to vanquish our Foes by Vertue and Moderation! And how much more glorious and fafe, than to fubdue them by Arms! Victory acquir'd by Force, compels Obedience; but when 'tis gain'd by Gentle ness and Humanity, it attracts it. The one reduces not the stubborn Mind but at the cost of mighty Evils and grievous Calamities, while the other leads us, and engages our Consent. Furthermore, where Victory is won by Arms, the Soldier hath his part of the Morit: rit; but the other way the Prince reaps all the Glory.

Vola

a how

erstood

course

eft his part |

n com-

n, as 1

dnes:

d with

Dian

in his

e, but

cy and

, that

bluf should nerous

ty tong his

can be

Ver-

more

m by

mpels

entle

one

e coft

ities,

s our

Won

Me-

rit;

But it may be objected, That this Errour was not entirely due to Philip, who was then but young, but ought principally to be ascrib'd to the Counfels of those about him; of which number were Aratus and Demetrius the Pharian: But it will not be hard to determine which of those two was likeliest to give such Advice, albeit he had not been then present at Council: For it will be no-where found in the whole Life of Aratus, that he ever acted any thing temerariously, and without folid Deliberation; while, on the contrary, Demetrius never did any thing but with precipita-And we shall shew, and plainly evidence by their Behaviour in the like Occurrences, the difference of the Minds and Manners of these two Men, as occasion shall be given us.

But to return to our Story? Philip taking with him all that could conveniently be carry'd, march'd from Therme by the way he came. The Booty he order'd to go in the Van, guarded by his heavy arm'd Troops: The Reer guard was assign'd to the Acarnatians and mercenary Strangers, being himself extreamly solicitous to get his passage through the Streights with what expedition he could, thereby to prevent the Ætolians, who in considence of the Strength of those Fastnesses, were likely enough to attempt their Reer in their march:

162 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. IL

march: Which, in short, came to pass; for affembling to the number of about three thonfand Men, under the leading of Alexander the Trichonian, they let the Van of the Army march without approaching, concealing themselves while the Macedonians kept the open Field: But as foon as the Reer began to move. they march'd into Therme, and fell on and charg'd them roundly, infomuch that they put their Reer-Ranks into great disorder: which the Ætolians perceiving, and favour'd by the advantage of Ground, press'd them to much the more, killing many. But Philip in forelight of what might happen, had order'd a Detachment of Illyrians, and some of his best Buckler-men, to be lodg'd in ambush under colour of a rifing Ground; who unexpectedly appearing, fell on the Enemy, who had now charg'd beyond them, killing above a hundred of them, and taking as many Pris'ners: the rest sav'd themselves by slight among the Rocks and Woods.

After this repulse, those who march'd in the Reer of the Army, set fire to Pamphion; and having pass'd the Strait, join'd the Macedonians again. Philip in the mean time encamping near Metapa, to attend their coming up; and the next Day, after he had order'd the Place to be demolish'd, he pursu'd his march, and came and encamp'd near a Town call'd Acras; from whence departing the next day, he pillag'd the Country all along as he went till he came to Conope, where he remain'd a day to refresh his Armore.

A. IL

; for

thou-

ander

Army

them-

open

move,

and

they rder :

our'd

em fo

lip in

of his

h un-

unex-

who

above Pris'-

mong

in the

; and

acedo

cam-

g up;

Place

came from

d the

to Co-

my;

my and then continu'd his march'd towards Stratus, along the River Achelons; where encamping out of thot of their Works, on an Eminence that commands the Town, he from thence vex'd and molested the Inhabitants. But coming to understand that the Enemy had strengthen'd the Garrison with a Recruit of Three Thousand Atolians, and Five Hundred Candiots; and none daring to adventure out against him, he decamp'd and march'd to Limnæa, purposing from thence to imbark. Nevertheless, as foon as the Reer of the Army began to move, and was gotten some distance past the Town, a Party of Atolian Horse made a Sally, and charg'd them; these being back'd by the Candiots, and more Ætolians that came out to fustain them, compell'd those in the Reer-guard to face about and make head. At first it was an equal Dispute; but as foon as the Illyrians came in to back the Mercenaries, the Ætolians began to give Ground, and the Horse betook them to flight, and were pursu'd to the very Gates of the Town, and at least a Hundred of them kill'd on the fpot. After this Repulse, those of the Town adventur'd no more out; and the Reer of the Army march'd without moleflation, coming fafe to the Camp, and to their Vessels. Here King Philip having commodiously

Here King Philip having commodiously Encamp'd the Army, facrific'd to the Gods, and did other Acts of Devotion for the good fucces of that Expedition, and at the same time gave his Officers a Royal Entertainment.

64 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. 11.

In short, his Attempt was look'd on hy all Men to have been very daring, to adventure as he did among those dangerous and untrevel'd places, which no Army had ever done before. Nevertheles, he succeeded in his Enterprize, marching and returning in fafety. after he had throughly executed what he had defign'd. Wherefore to express his Joy, he made a solemn Feast for his Officers; when Megaleas and Leontius, who had been much disappointed, and look'd with an evil Eye on the good Fortune of their Master, having as we have heard, complotted with Apelle to give him all the Impediments they should be able, but could by no means prevent the good Fortune which attended his Arms, were however prefent; tho' their Behaviour then express'd so much distaste, that it was not unobserv'd by the King, and those about him: who thereby collected, that they had diffe rent Sentiments from the rest, touching the prosperity of his Affairs. And now, when all were well warm'd with Wine, Megaleas and La ontins being oblig'd to do as others did, came at length more openly to manifest their Minds for being now drunk, they went from place to place in fearch of Aratus; and meeting him as he was returning from the Feast, they first attack'd him with rude Language, and afterwards came to offer violence. Whereup on a Tumult arose, and the Soldiers came a bout them from all Quarters, infomuch as the whole Book V. of the World.

whole Camp was in diforder. The King, upon notice hereof, immediately fent to appeafe the Tumult, and to have an account how it happen'd: Where after Aratus had reported to him how every thing had pass'd, and had vouch'd it by the Testimony of such as were present, he retir'd to his Tent. having in the mean time conceal'd himself in the Crowd, privately withdrew.

The King being now fully inform'd of every thing, commanded Megaleas and Crinon to be brought before him, whom he very severely reprov'd: But they were not only not humbled and made sensible of their Fault, but adding Insolence to their Error, plainly told the King, That they should not be drawn to change their Mind, till they had been thorowly reveng'd on Aratus. Whereupon the ot un-King, greatly mov'd at this their Behaviour, him; immediately condemn'd them in a Fine of diffe twenty Talents each, and put them under an Arrest; and sending the next Day for Aratus, express'd his fense of the violence which had been offer'd him, giving him assurance of his Protection, and that he would take due care to do him right.

Leontius being inform'd how the King had proceeded with Megaleas, came boldly to him, accompanied with a Party of his Buckler-men, thinking thereby to put him into some apprehension, he being yet but young, and to awe him into another Refolution touching the

La

me a as the whole

ol. II.

by all

enture

untm-

done

in his

fafety,

e had

by, he

where

much

ve on aving,

pelles

hould

e the

Were

t here

g the en all

nd La

came

linds:

place

ecting

they

and

reup

166 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. 11

Offenders; wherefore he boldly demanded of him, who it was that had prefum'd to hy hands on Megaleas, and cast him into Prison But when the King firmly reply'd, and with an Assurance worthy of Himself, That what soever had been done, was by his express Command, Leontins was confounded, and betwixt Grief and Indignation retir'd from his Presence.

Here Philip embark'd, and arriv'd with his Fleet foon after at Lencas; where when he had directed those who had the charge of dividing the Booty to hasten the distribution thereof: He affembled his Council, and fell to debate about the Affairs of Megaleas; where Aratus charg'd him, and the rest of that Faction, with all those criminal Practices we have noted. He farther laid to their charge the Murther that had been committed after the departure of Antigonus, and opened the whole Matter of the Conspiracy of Apelles, shewing in what manner they had obstructed the King's Business in the siege of Palaa. And forasmuch as he urg'd nothing against them that was not vouch'd by folid Reasons, and made evident by competent Witnesses; Megaleas and his Complices became so hard set, that they had nothing to fay in their defence; wherefore they were with one Voice found Guilty. Crinon continu'd a Prisoner; but Leonrius became Caution for Megaleas, binding himself for the payment of the Fine the King Book \
King ha

Vol.II

nded of

to lav

Prifon

nd with

t what expres

d, and

d from

d with

when irge of

bution

nd fell

where

nat Fa.

es we charge

after

ed the

pelles.

ucted

And

them

, and

Me-

d fet,

ence:

found

but bind-

the

King

the World.

King had laid on him. This was the success of the treasonable Conspiracy of Apelles and his Adherents, which had quite another issue than they look'd for, having promis'd to themselves that they should oblige Aratus to retire from the King out of fear; and that after they had remov'd the rest of his Servants, who had any Trust about him, they should then Reign alone, and Rule all as they list ; but their Project fail'd them.

About the same time Lycurgus return'd from Messina and Lacedamon, having done nothing worth recording: Afterwards, on a fecond Expedition, he feiz'd on Tegaa; where the Inhabitants retiring into the Citadel, he resolv'd to besiege it. But after many fruitless Attempts, despairing of Success, he was obligd to march back to Sparta. mean while the Eleans made perpetual Inroads on the Lands of Dymas, where the Horse of that Place, which march'd out to fuccour the Country, were drawn into an Ambush, and defeated with little difficulty. Gauls were kill'd on the place, and certain of the Inhabitants made Prisoners; among whom were Polymedes of Ægium, and Agesipolis and Megacles of Dymas.

Dorimachus also took the Field with the Ætolian Troops, in considence, as hath been noted, that he should be able to ravage Thessaly, and thereby oblige the King to rise from before Palæa: But Chrysogonus and Patræus

L 4

pre-

prevented them, being there ready to receive them with an Army; which oblig'd Doring chus to keep the Mountains, and not to adventure into the Plain Country. Who, shortly after, being inform'd that the Macedonian had invaded Ætolia, march'd out of Thessay, and hasten'd to the relief of his Country; but before he arriv'd the King was retir'd. Thus Dorimachus coming always too late, made many vain Expeditions.

In the mean time King Philip having embark'd his Troops at Leucas, and plunder'd the Coast of Hyanthes in his way, arriv'd with his Fleet at Corinth, where landing his Army, and ordering the Vessels to be drawn over to the Port of Lechaum; he dispatch'd his Letters to all the Confederate Towns of Pelopon wefus, appointing them a Day when they were to Rendezvous their Troops at Tegas. And making but short stay at Corinth, he march'd his Army by the way of Argos, and came the next Day to Teges; where joining fuch of the Achaian Horse as were there ready, he proceeded, marching over the Mountains with delign to fall by furprize on the Territory of the Lacedamonians. And after four Days march through a Defart Country, he gain'd the tops of those Eminences that lie over-against, and give a prospect of the City of Sparta, and leaving Menelaium on his right, came close by Amycla.

of

receive Dorimato ado, fhortdonians be fally y; but Thus made ig eminder'd d with Army, ver to is Letclopon they regag. b, he , and ining eady, ntains rritofour

, he lie o-City ight,

The

The Lacedamonians beholding his march from the Town were greatly alarm'd, and to feek what to do. For the news of the plundering of Therme, and the many gallant Actions perform'd by King Philip in his Ætolian Expedition, gave them both present Terror. and future Caution. There was indeed a Rumour among them, as if Lycurgus should be fent to the Succour of the Atolians : But no Body could suspect that King Philip would be able to compals fuch a march in fo fhort a frace, while they confider'd him too of an Age, more to be contemn'd than fear'd. Wherefore feeing now Matters to fucceed fo contrary to their Expectations, it was no wonder they became surpriz'd. But in a word. his Deliberations and their Effects fo far furpas'd the expectation of his Age, that his Enemies every where were held in fear and fuspension. For marching out of the heart of Atolia, he cross'd the Gulf of Ambracia, and gain'd the Port of Leucas in the space of one Night: where remaining but two Days only. he parted early the third, and plundering in the way all the Coast of Atolia, he arriv'd afely at Lechaum. From thence continuing his march, he came in feven Days near Meselaium, gaining the Hills that give a view of the City of Sparta. So that who foever hall compute the expedition of his Motions. would not be able without difficulty to believe what they faw; which was the subject of the Lacedæmonians aftonishment, who kees neither what to do or resolve.

POLYBIUS's General History Vol.

176

The King's first Encampment was near A mycla, a Town distant from Sparta about for Miles, furpaffing all others in excellent Fr and delightful Gardens; where there is Temple of Apollo, inferiour to none in the whole Country of Laconia, both for Dignin and Riches. The next Day plundering all Low-Country as he march'd, he came to Place call'd Pyrrhus-Castle; and after doin all the spoil he could for two Days togethe in that Neighbourhood, he came and camp'd near Carnium. From thence he k the Army to Afina, where he made a fruitle attempt to become Master of that Place Wherefore he decamp'd, and ravag'd all the Country as far as Tenarus which lies town the Sea of Candia, putting all to Fire and Sword. Then turning off, he took his mand by the way that leads to the Port of the Leedamonians call'd Gythium, where there is good Haven: Which Place is likewise distant from Sparta about four Miles. But soon less ing Gythium on his right, he came and es camp'd near Elia, the best and most spacion Country of the whole Spartan Territory From thence, fending out Parties, he spread War and Depredation far and wide, making grievous spoil on the Corn and Fruits of the Country. He plunder'd also Acria and Lews and the Lands of Beara.

near A

out for

nt Fr

re is in th

Dignin

g allt

ne to r doin

town

the L

diftant

n lear

nd en

paciou

ritory

of the

Leuca

In

he k fruitle Place all the re and match re is i Ipres naking

In the mean while the Messenians, having receiv'd King Philip's Letters, whereby they were enjoyn'd to take the Field with their Troops: forthwith compos'd a Body of two Thousand chosen Foot and Two Hundred Horse: and came short of none of the Confederates in their readiness and good Will. But forafmuch as it was not possible for them, by reason of their remote distance, to comply punctually with the day the Troops were to affemble at Tegaa, they remain'd a while in suspence, uncertain how to proceed. Howbeit, doubting lest their delay should be interpreted an effect of their former backwardnels, they came to a determination to march. and to take their way by Laconia, through the Territory of the Argians, and to joyn the King's Forces with what speed they might. Accordingly they took the Field, and arriving near Glympia, a Fortress on the Borders of the Argians and Lacedamonians, it chanc'd that they did not encamp with that circumspection which they ought, having neither Retrenchment or Pallisade; nor was the place where they Encamp'd well chosen; but in confidence of the good Will of the Inhabitants, they quarter'd themselves under the Walls of the place. Lycurgus coming to understand the Messenians were arriv'd, took with him his Mercenaries, and a small Party of Lacedemonians, and march'd to attack them; and coming upon them about the close of the Evening, vening, boldly attempted their Camp. now, tho' the Messenians had acted otherwise imprudently in every thing, and had march'd with too small a Force, and destitute of Offi. cers in whose Judgment and Abilities they might rely; nevertheless, their behaviour in this Rencounter was without blame, confidering the furprize. For as foon as they receiv'd notice of the arrival of Lycurgus, leave ing all their Lumber, and whatever might trouble them behind, they retir'd to a certain Fortress, so that the Enemy got nothing but their Baggage and a few Horses; of their Foot they loft not a Man, and of their Horse not above eight or nine, who fell on the fpot After this Defeat the Meffenians return'd home by the way of Argos; and Lycurgus exalted with his Success march'd back to Sparta, where he fell to making of new Levies, and to deliberate with his Friends how to proceed so as to oblige Philip to come to a Battel before he left Laconia. But the King no vertheless march'd from Elia plundering and ravaging the Country all along in his way, and four Days after return'd to Amycla with his Army in view of the Enemy.

As foon as Lycurgus had given the necessary Orders to his Friends and Officers touching the Battel they had resolv'd on, he commanded the Troops to draw out of the Town, consisting of about Two Thousand Men, taking Possession of all the nearest Posts to Me-

nelaium;

ol.IL

erwife

arch'd f Off

s they

our in confi

ey re

leav,

might certain

ig but their

Hore

e fpot. home

xalted

parta,

, and

pro-

a Bat-

g ne

and

Way,

with

ceffi.

ouch. com-

own.

, ta-

Meium ;

And

relaium; leaving Instructions with those that were appointed to remain within the Town. to have a special regard to a Signal that he would give them; which, as foon as they hw, they should iffue out of the Town with all expedition, and by as many ways as they could, and draw up on a certain Ground where the River ran nearest to the Town.

In this posture stood Matters between the two Armies: But lest our Relation should feem obscure through want of due light in the nature and fituation of Places about which we treat, we shall therefore do our best to be as clear in that, as in our accounts of matters of fact, which shall be our manner throughout our whole Work. Some Places which are unknown, we shall describe by comparing them with others that are known, distinguishing them by Marks and Notes of common Observation: For through want of a right Information herein, many and great Errors have been committed in the Conduct of Enterprizes both by Sea and Land. But we shall abour our utmost, that the Readers of our History may be instructed as well in the manner as matter of Occurrences; and that nothing may be left unfaid touching the Description of Towns and Countries, and principally in Military Adventures, wherein the better to explain our Mind, we shall have recourse sometimes to some certain Port of the Sea, sometimes to an Island, sometimes to fome fome conspicuous Temple, Promontory, a Mountain, or the Name of some Country, and, in short, the divers Regions of the Havens, as being things generally known, an familiar to Mankind. 'Tis by this Methothen, I say, that we hope to be able to led the Reader to a just Conception of Place and Situations, to him otherwise unknown.

POLYBIUS's General History Vol.

To give a general description then of the City of Sparta, 'tis observable, that in figur it is round; it stands on a plain or bottom where there rifes here and there certain Ha locks or Eminences; and some places are waste and barren. On the West-side run the River Eurotas, which is deep and unsort able at certain Seasons of the Year. The Mountains of Menelaium are on the other fide of the River, regarding the North East pan of the Town; these being almost inaccessible and exceeding high, command all the space of Ground lying between the Eurotas and the Town; which space, in a word, taking likewise the River into the account, which runs by the fcot of the Hills, is not above Furlong and an half wide. Now, by this way King Philip was oblig'd to pass in his return from his Expedition, having on his left the Town, and the Lacedamonians draws up in Battalia, and on his right the River and the Troops of Lycurgus posted on the skirts of the Hills. Furthermore, the Late demonians having stop'd the course of the River.

River,

Mer-

River, had brought all that space of Ground, we mention'd, under Water; so that it became mpossible for their Foot, much less their Horse, to march. Wherefore the King's Army had no other way to go, but in desilée along the so the meither party could sustain or relieve the other; and the whole Army would run a mighty hazard, marching so expos'd to the continual shot of the Enemy. Philip therefore well weighing the Peril, resolv'd that nothing could be better first done, than to attempt Lycurgus, and endeavour to beat him from his Post. Wherefore taking with him his Mercenaries and Buckler-men, which were sufficiently towards the Hills. Lycurgus, who could not but understand the The and march'd directly towards the Halls. Lyter fide curgus, who could not but understand the fit pan King's purpose, put himself in a posture to receive him; and at the same time gave Signal to those within the Town; who immetaking been order'd, placing the Horse on their which right. When Philip was advanc'd somewhat bove a near to Lycurgus, he order'd the Mercenaries by this to march to the Attack; and so began the in his lattel. For a while the Lacedamonians, haon his ving the advantage both in their Arms and on his ving the advantage both in their Arms and drawn the Ground, had also the better in the Dif-River, pute: But as soon as the Buckler-men advanced in the to fustain the others, and that Philip himself Lace with the Illyrians fell on their Flank, the of the Mercenaries on the coming up of this Relitook new Courage, and engag'd with so more bravery, that Lycurgus was worsted, and be took himself to slight, leaving about an Himself of his Men dead on the place, and greater number that were taken Prisoner Many got into the Town; and Lycurge himself, savour'd by the coming on of the Night, got likewise through by-ways in Sparta. Whereupon Philip, having now the Mountains to friend, where he plac'd the Illerians on the Guard, return'd himself with the Buckler-men and Mercenaries to the gross

At the same time Aratus came from Am clæ with the Phalanx; on whose approach i the Town, Philip repass'd the River to cour tenance his march, posting himself with the Buckler men and light-arm'd Troops, to a ver those also who carry'd heavy Arms during their passage by that streight piece of Ground along by the foot of the Hills. In the men time, those who were drawn up nearest th Town attack'd the Horse, who were poste to cover the march of the rest. In which of casion the Dispute was very obstinate, when the Buckler-men perform'd excellent Service But in conclusion, the King had the bette here likewise; and pursuing the Enemies Hor to the Gates of the City, pas'd the Rive without difficulty, and joyn'd the Phalant But Night now approaching, he found it be hove FE POLY LEGITARY HINDS: A NOR hoveful to halten his Retreat, and was oblig'd to Edcamp on a piece of Ground, just with out the Streight or Defilée.

Vol. I

s Relie

fo mud

and be an Hup

and

rifones

Lycurgu

of the

ys into

now the

the Ill

with the gross of

m Am

oach to co coun-

vith the

, to co

s during

Ground

ne men

rest the poste

hich oc

, when

Service

e bette

es Hori

e Rive

halanz

d it be hove

It fo chanc'd, that the Guides themselves had pitch'd on that very place wherein to Encamp, being so advantageous a Spot, that whosoever would make Incursions into Lacoia, tis impossible to choose a more commodious Post: For it lies in the way to Tegra, and the Inland parts of the Country on the Banks of the River commanding the entrance of the Defilée, distant about a quarter of a Mile from Sparta, that fide which looks toward the Town being cover'd by the Brow of an inaccessible Hill. It lies, I fay, just under the Rocks and Precipices thereof, being a level piece of Ground, plentifully supply'd with Water, infomuch as it feems destin'd by Nature to ensure to the Soldier a faf entrance and retreat; where being once Encamp'd, and Masters of the Eminence, they may with affurance fay, they are both fafe and posses'd of a most pleasant Post, which commands the Passage in and out of the Streight.

Here Philip, having pass'd the Night withbox any Alarm, in the Morning caus'd his baggage first to march; and leading the Army into the Plains, he there drew up in Batalia, in view of the City of Sparta, where he remain'd a while, to see if the Enemy were dispos'd to further Action: Then making a short turn, took his way toward Tegwa; and coming to the Ground where the Battel had been heretofore fought between Antigonus and Cleomenes, he there Encamp'd. And the new Day after he had well observ'd every thing and facrific'd on the top of either Mountain the one being call'd Olympia, the other Eve fecuring his Rear-guard, he profecuted his march to Tegaa, where he commanded the Booty to be fold, and then return'd by Argn to Corinth with the whole Army. There he was met by Ambassadors from Rhodes and Chios, who were dispatch'd to him on the Subject of a Pacification. The King gave them Audience, and made femblance of an Inclination to a Peace with the Ætolians, with whom he wish'd them to conferr and delibe rate by what means it might be brought to pass: So dismissing the Ambassadors, he went to Lechaum, purposing to Embark from thence, in order to a Descent on the Land of the Phocians, where he had meditated form Enterprize of great importance.

M coming

About this time Leontius, Megaleas, and Ptolomy, being not yet totally out of hope of giving some apprehension to King Philip endeavour'd (so to cover their old Crimes) to soment a murmuring among the Bucklemen and the King's Guards (and they themselves instill'd the like seditious Opinions) that they who were first in all Hazards, and securit the rest of the Army from Danger, were not treated according to their Merit; and were el had

us and

e next

thing.

ntain.

Eva

d his

ed the

Argu

ere he

s and

n the gave

of an s, with delibe ght to

Went

from

Land form

s. and

hope

Philip

mes)

ckle them

s) this

ecur re no

West

pot

not only not confider'd and diffinguish'd by any particular Reward for their Service ; but even fuch Booty as fell into their hands was taken from them, notwithstanding the conflant custom in the like cases to the contrary. After this manner they had so inflam'd them, that affembling in Parties, they attempted and rifled the Quarters of the King's chief Friends and Favourites; infomuch that their infolence grew to that height, that they forbore not at length the King's own Lodgings, breaking the Roof thereof.

This Mutiny spread so great Terror and Disturbance about the City, that the King having notice thereof, came with all possible expedition from Lechæum; and immediately assembling the Macedonians, partly by Remonstrances, partly by Menaces, appeas'd the Tumult. But forasmuch as on such occasions Men are of divers Minds, some advising to find out and feize on the Authors of the Sedition to make them Examples; others, that it were better to reduce things to Order, and pacifie the Tumult without any further Process or Inquisition; wherefore the King, hiding his Purpose for the present, and seeming well fatisfy'd with what he had already done, exhorted them only to Union and better Obedience, and fo difmis'd the Assembly. Not but that he was well aware who had been the prime Movers and Instigators of the Sedition, but thought it Wisdom at that time to M 2

POLYBIUS's General Hiftory Vote

feem less knowing than he was. But the flirs were foon over, and King Philip's Phician Expedition likewife at that time for the sain Reasons respited.

tain Reasons respited.

And now Leontius, coming to perceived vanity of his guilty Projects, and the daily rous state he had contracted, had recourse Apelles, foliciting his return from Chalcis, giving him frequent intimations of the min difficulties he met with; and that the Rie grew into greater diflike of him in every thin Now 'tis to be noted, That during Apelle residence at Chalcis, his Deportment was mor like a Sovereign Prince than a Subject, go verning all things with an Arbitrary Author rity, and labouring to be thought fingular i his Sufficiency and Power, and that the Kin acted nothing but by his Counfels; by which means he disposed absolutely of every thing Wherefore all who were in the Magistrac and had charge of the Affairs in Macedon an The faly ever apply'd to him, and took h directions in all their Consultations. Andi short, when at any time any of the Gree Towns had occasion to publish any new La or Ordinances, or to confer Honours or Pr ferments, there was hardly any mention me of the King, but of Apelles.

Wherefore when Philip came to be right inform'd of all these things, he grew jul fensible of the Outrage that had been do him: Nor was Aratus wanting to warm

Indignation; howbeir, he carry'd his Resentut the ments to close, that none were privy to his p's Ph Purpole, or knew any thing of his Mind. for a spelles therefore; far from suspecting the least coldness from the King, was persuaded, that eive ! he should be receiv'd at Court, after his wontdate d manner, and foon dispose of the King's ourle n leis, an e man he Rie y thin Apello as mon ect, go Autho gular in he King v which v thing giltrac don an took hi Andi e Gree ew Lav or Pr on med

e right w jul en do varm b

Mind at his pleasure, wherefore he left Chalon to come to the Aid of Leontius. And now ashe drew near to Corinth, Prolomy, Leontius and Megaleas, who commanded the Bucklermen, and had prime Authority in the Army, lo wrought that the Flower of the King's Troops went out to meet and accompany him. Infomuch, that what with Officers and Soldiers they compos'd a pompous Train, with which he made his entrance into the Town, and so went directly to wait on the King. But while he attempted (according to his manner heretofore) to enter into the Prelence, an Officer, who had receiv'd Orders to that effect, with held him, telling him, that he must wair, for that the King was bu-Ge. This was a fore rebuke to Apelles, who Good affonish'd without any Reply, and after he had attended a while, retir'd to his Lodgings, accompany'd only with his own Domeflicks; all the rost having already deserted him. Behold the uncertain state of mortal Greatness, where in one and the same Moment Men are rais'd to highest Promotions, and funk to the lowest ebb of Fortune;

M 3

and this principally in the Courts of Prince where like Counters their Value rifes and fil according to the place they are fet in the those who follow the Court are Great and Little at the Pleasure of their Master, who hold their Fortune in his keeping.

As foon as Megaleas (contrary to his hopes came to understand there was no prospect falety by the Mediation of Apelles, he begin to see his danger nearer, and bethought his of seeking security by slight. For, in those tho'it may be faid, that after this Apelles w suffer'd at Court, and appear'd in ordinary Deliberations, yet he was never after admin ted to the King's Cabinet, where Matters's weight were principally handled. Some tim after the King came to refolve to Embark Lechaum, to pursue his Phocian Delign, where of he had fo long meditated, taking Apelle with him; but that Affair not succeeding he steer'd another course, and came to El 10 30013 8 tea.

Megaleas then, without any confideration of Leontius, who was his Surety in the fumo of Twenty Talents, made his Escape, and go into Athens; but the Government of the Place not permitting his stay there, he went from thence to Thebes. In the mean time, the King with the Court departing from Corka, sail'd to Sicyon, where the Magistrats came out to receive him, and invited him to a Palace, prepar'd to entertain him, which is thank

Prince and fill in ; eat and ho hold hopes fpect of e began ht hm n thort ttes was rdinary admit ttersol ne time bark n where Apelle reding to El cration of the e wen n time m Ch ffratt him w fumi

and go

iich h thank-

thankfully excus'd, making choice of the House of Aratus, with whom he spent whole Days in Deliberations about his Affairs. During his abode there he dispatch'd Apelles to Grinth; and as foon as he came to know of the flight of Megaleas, he sent Taurion to Trishalia at the head of his Buckler-men, whose chief Officer was Leontius, seeming to have fome extraordinary occasion of their Service; who were no fooner departed, when he caus'd Leontins to be secur'd for the payment of the Twenty Talents wherein he stood bound. But the Buckler-men coming to hear thereof, by a Messenger which Leontius had dispatch'd, fent their request to the King; praying him, that if Leontius Commitment was on any other account than that of his Surety-ship, that he would be pleas'd not to determine any thing against him, during their absence; and that they should interpret any Sentence in his prejudice, as an Injury done to them, and should accordingly so resent it; (it having been a Custom among the Macedonians to use that liberty with their Kings) that in case Leontins was imprison'd to secure the payment of the Money due on account of Megaleas, they would readily contribute towards fatislying that Debt. But this their Affection thown to Leoneius prov'd unseasonable, and was fo ill taken by the King, that it became the occasion of his Death sooner than he intended.

M 4

While

184 POLYBIUS General Hiftory Wohn

While these Maiters were under beiting the Ambassadors from Rooder and Chirolature of from Explanation of Arms for the Days; reporting that the Acolomic were winclinable to a Treaty, and that they had a pointed a Day for their assembling at Rhim where they pray do the King to give them meeting, promising all the Advances possible on their part towards a Pacification.

After the King had ratify'd the Treaty Truce, he fent his Dispatches to the Cont derates, requiring them to fend their refer dive Deputies to Patra, there to treat about the Peace with the Atolians 4 then fetting fail from Lechaum, he came the next Day to Patra. About the same time Letters were fent him out of Phocia, that had been with by Megaleas to the Ætolians, whereby he in cited them vigoroufly to profecute the Win for that King Philip, through want of Provi fions and Stores of War, was at the point of Despair. Furthermore, the said Letters contain'd very reproachful and injurious Reflecti ons on the King, which plainly evidenc'd the Man's Hatred to him. Upon reading the Letters, the King became firmly affur'd, that Apelles was at the bottom, and Author of all these Evils; wherefore he order'd him to be raken into Custody, and forthwith brought to Corinth, together with his Son, and a Youth his Favourite. He also dispatch'd Alexander 17 that he should be convend before the Magin thing for which security had been given. This Com-ever suffice Alexander executed with diligences ad as But Megaleas prevented him by killing him-Rhim felf, not being willing to adventure a Thesh hemo At the fame time Apelles was put to death, offith methor with his Son and Favourite Thus aty to other than what was due to their manner of Conf. Life paft, and principally affeir practices aabout the Actalians, they were fincerely fetting disposed to Peace, being grown weary of the Day to War, all their Projects having succeeded write were otherwise than they had propos'd; for they with expected to have to do with a Prince raw and he in unfit to govern, King Philip being not arriv'd War. at an Age, as they thought, of Conduct and Experience, while in the mean time they found him a ripe and enterprizing Leader, able and qualify'd both for Counsel and Execution; and the weak and unwife Part feem'd to be turn'd bathemselves, as well with respect to the Administration of their particular Affairs, as the Conduct of the War in general. But when they came to hear of the Mutiny of the Bucklet men, and the Death of Leontius and Apelles. hoping these Troubles would beget Distractions at Court, they therefore respited their meeting at Rhium, which they did from time to

Provi-

int d

COD

flecti

d the

the

that of all

to be

htw

outh

ander

to

to time; while King Philip, swho had a hope ful profest of the life of the War, and was indeed come to give all the impediment could to the Treaty of Peace, was glad of the occasion they gave him. Wherefore, afterh had exhorted and animated the Confederate to the profecution of the War, he weight Anchor again and fail'd back to Corint Then fending his Macedonians to their Wines Quarters in their own Country, they took their march home through Theffaly, while ke himself, after his departure from Cenchree coasting it along the Attic Shoar, came by the Buripus to Demetrias, where Ptolomy, the only remaining Conspirator in the Treason of Apelles, was fentenc'd by the Macedonism, and accordingly put to death.

gain'd his Passage into Italy, was encample on the Banks of the Po, in view of the Roman Army; that Antiochus, having reduc'd to his Dominion a great part of Syria, had put his Army into Garrisons; and that Lycurgus, searing ill-dealing from the Ephori, had with drawn and retir'd into Ætolia: For he had been wrongfully accus'd to them, as if he had meditated some Innovation in the Government. Whereupon assembling in the Night, they came and beset his House; but he having timely notice of their Purposes, had with his Domesticks made his escape,

The king being now return I home about a beginning of Winter, the Achaian Troops whing Eperatus the Prayor in contempt, and the mercenary Strangers in like manner confidence him as a Man of no worth, informed that they came to despite his Authority, refusing to pay him Obedience; by which means a come to pals, that they wanted Troops to hard and defend their Fronciers.

This became a motive to Pyribias, (whom Metotrans had fent to command the Elean Forces) to compole an Army confilling of borteen hundred Atolians, about a thouland Mercenaries and Militia of the Town, and wo hundred Horse, making in all about three housand Men; and with these he did not only waste the Territory of Dymas and Phara, ber proceeded to Patra; and taking posselfor of the Mountain Panachaicus which comminded the Town, he phinder'd and put to Fire and Sword all the Country that her in the way to Rhium and Agium; infomuch that Hole Towns of Achaia Which labour'd under these Evils, and saw no hopes of redress, betime confirmind to submit to lie under Con-Inbution: For the Soldiers being in Arrear of their Pay, refus'd to receive Orders, when at my time they were commanded to march on Expedition for the relief of the Country. Whereupon the Affairs of the Achaians grew from bad to worle, their mercenary Troops hally deferring the Service: All which Calamities

The

old

hope

nd was

of the

derate

eight

orinth

Vinter

took nile he

schrea,

byth

y, the

fon of

oniani,

naving

ampl

Roman

to his

at his

, fear-

with

e had ne had

vem

Vight,

e ha-

with

mities were, in a word, to be afcribe to the Influffiguency of Eperatus the Prætor. Matter flood in this posture then in Achaia when Extratus's Authority expired, who was succeeded early in the Summer, by Aratus the Elder.

Hitherto we have poken of the Assayla

Hitherto we have spoken of the Assard Europe only; now pursuing the Order of Co currences, we are arrived, as it were, at a fair and easie passage to those of Asia; let a proceed then to recount the Hostilities trans acted in those parts of the World, contemporary with the others we have already related.

We shall begin, as we promise, with the History of the War, that was wag d between Antiochus and Ptolomy for the Lower Syrin For albeit Holfilities were yet on Foot between thele two Princes, at the time we brake of our Relation of the Grecian Affairse neverthe les, we had good reason to purise that Me thod, for the better uniting the Parts of our History. And to prevent the danger of M stakes in the Reader, touching the Date Transactions, we conceive we have there done enough, when in speaking of what was there acted during that Olympiad, and what at the same time in Greece, we have punctual ly remark'd the beginning and end of the Afian Transactions Furthermore, for the better perspicuity of our History, and that we may render it more intelligible, we have judg dait most behaveful not to mingle the Oc currences of that Olympiad, but to refer it to fuble 211 (1)

186

bequent Times, when we fall affign to Tear ins peculiar Actions and Advendestaken to write not any particular or fewas History, but to recount all that was one every where at the fame time ; and formuch as we have engag'd in a Work fupefour to all who have gone before us; we meht therefore to make it our chief Bulinels to dispose of the several Members, and uthe Parts in fuch order, that the whole my appear uniform and entire : and yet that moone part thereof may be liable to obscurity. Whereof after we shall have here first hinted ame distant matters touching the Reigns of Artiochus and Ptolemy, we shall then proceed begive our Story such a beginning, as shall be wident and known to all, and of a piece with the Occurrences which preceded.

のようなできる。

The Ancients have somewhere said, That a good beginning is half the Work; whereby they would instruct us, that in all our Undertakings, our principal Care should be to begin well whatsoever we go about: And 'tis possible some may object', That they have series gone too far, while in my Judgment they have said less than the matter will bear. For I think it may with safety be maintain'd, That not the half only of any Enterprize is effected when 'tis well begun, but the whole well-nigh brought to pass: For 'tis impossible to enter successfully on any Design whatsoever,

ever, without having first form'd and dignified the whole Project, and meditated wind deliberation both on the beginning, progress and end. For who can be able to give a Summary, or Recapitulation, of what he had written at the end of his Discourse, if there be not connexion or coherence in what he had deliver'd, whereby it may be discern'd, from whence, why, and how matters have been conducted to that iffue? He therefore who would write a General History, or would but study it as he ought, should above all things labour to begin well, and then he may conclude the better half of his Work done. And this shall be our utmost Endeavour.

Nevertheless, 'tis feen that most Historians of fay with me, That they write a General H. story, and that their Work is the greatest the hath ever been undertaken. But of all their Authors, I know none, Ephorus excepted, who was the first and only Writer that hath propos'd indeed to compose a General History But I will not arraign any one here in particular; and only remark, that there have been Authors in these our days, who undertaking to write History, have in three or four Page. comprehended the Wars of the Romans and Carthaginians, and with affurance are bold to boaft they have therein written the whole Story of the Universe. True it is, that that Age was celebrated for many great Actions both in Spain, Africk, Sicily, and Italy; and digs de War of Hannibal exceeded all others, both win bignity and Duration, except the first great funct War, when the Dominion of Sicily Sum es contested; which, in short, was such as had the whole World in suspence, all Nations there under great Fear and Uncertainty attending hat the Event. But who is fo stupid or incufrom fous, that is not in some measure instructed ben in these Adventures? And yet there are Histo-when hims, who tho' they have touch'd never so don interficially those matters, would neverthehing les persuade us they have lest nothing unsaid of the Affairs of the Greeks and Barbarians; and these I think may be fitly compared to those Painters, who according to the custom rians of some States, draw on the Walls of their Publick Buildings, the History of their Extent phoits in divers Ages and Places, and would be their t pted, thing just as it was done.

the

hath If it should be demanded then, how Historians come to be guilty of this Vanity? I anwer, That it is easie to promise any thing, been and as easie to undertake and engage in the king most difficult Enterprizes by Words and Difand the Difficulty of the execution. The one is d to common and familiar, the other rare and next hole to impossible; and who foever he may be that that both compass'd it, it must have been at the ion cost of mighty Pains, and the product of maand by Years of Life. Thus much I have thought fit to fay, in reproof of fuch as over boalling ly magnifie their Works, and vain-gloriously exalt their own Merit. But now let us proceed to our Bufiness.

Ptolomy King of Egypt, furnam'd Philips ter, took on him the Government of the Kingdom on the death of his Father, and the murder of Megas his Brother and his Adhe rents; by which means, and some other Ad of Caution, he reckon'd himself secure again. any Attempts from those of his own Hour and concluded Fortune Herfelf had covered him from all Dangers abroad. Furthermore Antigonus and Seleucus being now dead, and Antiochus and Philip succeeding them, who were yet but young, and hardly out of their Childhood: Prolomy, I say, for these Reason beholding himself shelter'd on all sides from Danger, govern'd his Kingdom as if his Ple fure and Ease had been now his only Busines. and refign'd up to a voluptuous Life, forgot the Duties of his Dignity, and grew to negled every body and every thing; all access to his became difficult, as well to those of his out Court, as others who had charge of Public Affairs, both within and without the Kingdom; albeit the Kings his Predecessors been no less solicitous for the one than the other, and as jealous of their Authority about as at home. For the Lieutenants of their Pro vinces in Calo-Syria and Cyprus were wonth wage War with the neighbouring Princes d affina

rioully

s pro

bilopa

of that

nd the

Adhe

r Ad

again

Houe. coverd

rmore d, and

, who

of their

Leafons

s from

is Ple

ulinek

got the

negled

to him is out

Public

King-

ors M

nces d

Syria

by Land and Sea; and those, who had Government of their principal Towns on Sea-coast from Pamphylia to the Helleand who had the Command of the centry bordering on Lyfimachia, kept a schful Eye on the Actions of the Princes of and of the Islands; while those that lin Enus, Maronea, and the Towns bed them, were as careful to observe the redonians and the Occurrences of Thraces much that the Ægyptian Kings, embra-fo wide a Dominion, were cover'd, as may fay, with a Buckler against all those baces, and never took thought for Egypt it while the Avenues were so carefully kept. forafmuch as the King we are fpeaking of left all things at random, while himfelf, flow'd in Love and Wine, took care for noit was not ftrange that he should foon Enemies, who would conspire against oth his Life and Kingdom.

The first of these was Cleomenes of Sparta, attempted nothing during the Life of alony Euergetes, with whom he was in t Friendship, and by whose Favour and Millance, he had hopes of recovering his Ingdom. But after his Death, and his own Mairs inviting him to try his Fortune, Antis in the being also now dead, and the Achaians abrow irested by War; and what Cleomenes had eir Proverardently labour'd to effect being come to worth his, namely, that the Atolians confederating

194 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. IL

ting with the Lacedamonians (who equally hated the Achaians and Macedonians) thousand jointly enter into a War against these to States . These things, I say, falling out, war a motive to press by all means possible his de parture from Alexandria. And first he move the King therein, demanding Succours bei of Men and Stores of War. Afterwards to ceiving him to lend no very willing Ear to be fuit, he befought him at least for permission be himself and Followers to depart; for that he could not hope for a more favourable Co. juncture, than that which now offer'd, in the recovery of his Kingdom. But Ptolon amus'd neither with future nor present thing giving himself up to his Pleasures and De bauches, came to no Resolution touching the Request of Cleomenes.

Furthermore, Sosibius, who at that time we first Minister of State, and govern'd the Assim of Egypt, coming to consult with his Friends thereupon, it was concluded among then that it was not sase not only to supply Clamenes with what he demanded, but even a let him depart the Kingdom. For after the death of Antigonus, they came to neglect the Frontier Provinces, taking for granted, that the expence of those Assairs was now needled. They surthermore consider'd, that Cleoment having now no Rival in Greece that could withstand him, became jealous lest coming recover the Dominion of that Country, he

migh

of. II.

Sook V. of the World. fe to them; knowing, as he fo well did, the Frailt, were the of their King, and the general State of the his de Syptian Affairs, and that their Provinces move were remote and disjointed, which he might rs bot greatly improve to their damage: For at Sato he for a great Body of Troops. Wherefore, I for a y, they resolved that it would not be Wisthathe dom to permit not only that Cleomenes should cos go with an Army, but not safe to permit him od, for to quit the Country at all, considering the tolor, Greatness of his Character, and how he had thing been disoblig'd, which he would consequently d De fludy to revenge. It remain'd then that they ng the must determine to detain him by force; and yet they wanted Refolution to conclude therenews on, looking on it as a dangerous Attempt to Affin imprison a Lion among a Flock of Sheep street and Sofibius himself became of that mind, for then the Reasons we shall now deliver.

At what time they were deliberating about ven to putting Magas and Berenice to death, fearing, terthe left their Design might miscarry through the the great Power and Resolution of Berenice. The , the Conspirators therefore were oblig'd to flatter edles and treat, with better usage than ordinary, omen time Persons about the Court; and to give could them Assurances of great Advantages, in case ing their Design succeeded. Wherefore Sossius y, he tell knowing of what importance it was to might the cood-will of the

N 2

King, whose Affistance he needed, and that he was an able and well-experienc'd Person, came to reveal the Conspiracy to him, adding many fair Promises, and Assurances of his good Offices in his Service; whereupon Cles. menes taking hotice of the Disturbance he was under, and that they very much apprehended Danger from their Mercenaries, told him he might be ought of pain in that particular, for that those People should give them no moleflation; but, on the contrary, if need were, should lend them their assistance This was a furprizing Saying to Sofibius, while Cleomenes proceeded; adding, that there were few less than three thousand Peloponnesians in the Army of Mercenaries, and at least a thoufand Candiots, who, upon his least beck, would be at his Command; and from the Troops of Syria and Caria, there was no danger to be fear'd. In short, this Discourse at that time greatly pleas'd Sofibius, and animated him to the murder of Berenice. But afterwards a often as he ruminated on the Folly and Weak ness of the King, and the hardy and enterprizing Qualities of Cleomenes, and the Affection the mercenary Soldiers bore him, he could not contain his Fear. Wherefore he prevaild with the King and those about him, to confent that Cleomenes might be taken into costody: And the better to compass his pur pose, he made use of an occasion we shall now relate. There chanc'd to be at that time it

ol. II.

that

erfon.

dding

of his

Clea

ce he

ppre

told

t par-

them

y, if

tance.

while

Were

ans in thou-

vould

ps of

to be

time

im to

rds as

Veak-

erpn

Ction

could vaild

COD

O CI-

pur

HOW

ne i

thete

these Parts, a certain Messenian call'd Nicagowho had been an old Friend of the Father of Archidamus King of Sparta and sheit with Archidamus himself he had not had that intimacy, nevertheless upon his leaving the City out of fear of Eleomenes, and reining to Messena, Nicagoras did not only hospitably receive him into his House, and supply him with all things necessary, but grew at length to cultivate a Friendship with him, equal to that which had been heretofore between him and his Father. Wherefore when afterwards it came to pass, that Cleomenes had given Archidamus some hopes of his return, and that there appear'd fome likelihood of an Accord, Nicagoras interpos'd his good Offices, and acted in the Treaty between them.

After all things feem'd to be adjusted, and that Archidamus on the Faith of Nicagoras's Treaty was returning, and on his way to Sparta, he was intercepted by Cleomenes, and sain, but without any Violence offer'd either to Nicagoras, who was in his company, or any body else of his Train. Wherefore Nicagotho' he made publick profession of his Obligation to Cleomenes for sparing his Life, nevertheless he harbour'd in his Mind Refentments suitable to that Outrage. Nicagoras then coming to Alexandria, to difpole of certain Horses he had brought over, is he was landing meets with Cleomenes, who with Panteus and Hippitas were walking on the Strand. As foon as Cleomenes knew him. he came and faluted him in friendly manner. demanding what business had brought him thither? And when he told him, he had brought over some Horses to fell : Cleomener reply'd, That he would have made a better Voyage, if he had brought a Cargo of Bef. foons, and Beautiful Boys, for that the present King like'd that fort of Merchandise much better. At which faying Nicagoras smiling, reply'd little; but a while after coming to have some Discourse with Sofibius about the disposal of his Horses, he told him what Cleamenes had faid, not without defign of doing him an ill Office at Court; and perceiving Sofibius pleas'd with the Relation, he proceed. ed to reveal to him the Subject of his Harred, and the Aversion he bore to Cleomenes.

N 3

Sosibius, coming thus to discover that Nicagoras was an Enemy to Cleomenes, prevail'd with him by Gifts and Promises to write a Letter to him, containing Accusations against Cleomenes, which Letter should be lest with one of his Servants on his departure, to be by him brought some Days after, as if Nicagoras had dispatch'd him for that purpose. Accordingly a Letter was written, and the Matter conducted as had been agreed, and as soon as Nicagoras was gone, the Messenger brought the Letter to Sosibius, which, together with the Bearer, he immediately carried to the King. The

ol. II

ng on him,

anner.

t him

e had

menes

better

Buf.

efent

much

iling,

g to

the

Clea

oing

ving

eed.

red,

ica-

il'd

te a

inft

ith

by rd.

ter as

ht

he

he

n-

Contents were, that in case Cleomenes were net speedily dispatch'd with a Body of Troops. and all things necessary for his Enterprize, he would be the occasion of great Troubles in the Kingdom. This then was the Engine whereby Sofibius wrought with the King and his Creatures to determine on putting Cleomewunder Confinement, and fecuring him with good Guard. Whereupon he was fecur'd, hiving a large House appointed him for his Prison, which differ'd from others in nothing, but that it was more spacious. And now Cleomenes perceiving there was no hope left him, refolv'd however to attempt his Inlargement by all the ways he could imagine, whereby to compass it; not that he saw how it could probably be effected, being destitute of all necellary means to put his purpose in Execution, at least he resolv'd to die like himself, and never yield to stain that Vertue which had render'd him so considerable in the World. And lam ready to believe he had his Mind prepofles'd, and fet before his Eyes what all great Men do in the like Exigencies.

To urge their Fate with safety to their Fame, and to Posterity confign a Name.

Cleomenes then being inform'd of the King's purpose to make a Progress Canopus, contivid to have it bruited among his Guards, that he was to be speedily set at liberty; and

N 4

on

on that pretext he caus'd Provision to be made for a great Entertainment to those of his Family, fending to his Guards plenty of Meat and Wine, Garlands of Flowers, &c. insomuch that the Soldiers drinking too plentifully, he took that occasion about mid-day to escape out of Prison, with all his Domesticks in his Company; who with their drawn Swords meeting in the Market-place with the Governour of the Town, they threw him out of his Chariot, and kill'd him on the place amidst his Guards, who stood astonish'd at the boldness of the Action; in the mean time, crying Liberty, Liberty, as they pass'd along. But when they faw none appoach to join them all People standing amaz'd at the Greatness of the Enterprize, they then betook them to wards the Castle, with design to set all the Prisoners at liberty, and to make use of their affiftance: but those who Commanded in that Fortress suspecting their purpose, and strengthened the Guards, and fecur'd the Gates: Whereupon Cleomenes and his Followers feeing now no hopes on that fide, turn'd their Swords on each other, and so generously dy'd (and as one may fay) Laconian-like. Thus fell Cleomenes, a Personage most agreeable, and admirably gifted for Conversation; but above all things qualify'd for the Conduct of great Affairs; and, in conclusion, one whom Nature had endow'd with all the advantages requisite to a great Captain and a King. Not ol.IL made is Fa.

Meat

much

y, he

Cape

n his

vords

over-

of his

nidft

bold-

ying

But

iem,

Is of

to-

heir

that eng-

fee-

heir

ly'd

fell

and

ove

eat Na-

re-

Vot

Not long after, Theodotus an Atolian, Governour of the Lower Syria, revolted; partly out of Contempt of the King, who led fo inamous a life, and partly out of an apprehenfor of ill Offices done him by the great ones at Court some time before; notwithstanding the good Service he had done the King in mamy occasions, and principally in the War aeainst Antiochus for the Lower Syria: Neverheless, he was so far from being consider'd according to his Merit, that being commanded to come to Court, he there ran great haard of his Life. Wherefore on these Provocations, Theodorus resolv'd to apply himself to Antiochus, and to put the Towns of that Country into his Hands; which Overture was gladly receiv'd by that Prince, and the Delign foon after put in Execution. we may Treat of the Family of this Prince in the same Method we have done the last, we shall have occasion to go a little back; and taking our beginning from the time of Antiochus's coming to the Crown, we shall descend to the Subject of the War, whereof we purpose to Treat.

Antiochus the Younger then, was the Son of Seleucus, who was firnam'd Callinicus; who after the Death of his Father, and the Accession of his Elder Brother to the Crown, went into the Topper Asia, where he held his Abode for some time. But on the Death of Seleucus his Brother, who was Treacherously

flain

flain in his Expedition over Mount Taurus, as we have elsewhere Noted; Antiochus Succeeded him who made Achaus Governour of all that part of Asia on this side Mount Taurus, and gave to Molon and his Brother, the Government of the Upper Provinces; namely, to Molon the Satrapie (so call'd) of Media, and to Alexander, that of Persia.

But these two Brothers contemning the Youth of the King, and being in hopes Achaws would join with them in the like Defign; and apprehending above all things, the Gruelty and perverse Mind and Calumnies of Hermias, who at that time Rul'd Affairs at Court; wherefore they came to a Resolution of casting off their Obedience, and of endeavouring to withdraw the other Satrapa's from their Duty to the King. Hermias was a Carianby Birth, and receiv'd his Authority, and the Administration of the Government, at the Handsof Seleucus: who at his Departure towards Mount Taurus, had committed the Affairs of the Kingdom, during his Absence, to his Care; who beholding himself thus Exalted, grew to Envy and Suspect all who had any Trust or Share in the King's Esteem. Word, being naturally a Tyrant, he would ordinarily punish the slightest Faults with Rigour, making them greater by his Exaggerations; and often appear'd a Cruel and Inexorable Judge towards others who had no Faults but of his finding. But above all things, he ol. II.

15, 25

ceed.

f all

urus,

Go-

nely,

edia,

· the

be-

gn;

uel-

ler-

urt;

aft.

ing

neir

by

the

the

to-

Af-

to

ed,

ny

1 2

ld

i-

2-

0-ts

10

as

was bent on the Ruine of Epigenes, who had the Charge of leading back the Troops, that were Assembled out of Affection to Seleucus. for he well knew him to be a Man both Eloment and Able for Execution, and who had great Authority in the Army. This he could not brook; wherefore he watch'd him with a Malicious Eye, and study'd by all ways possible, to render him Obnoxious. In short, it chanc'd, that while they were deliberating in Council about the Rebellion of Molon, and on the King's Command, that every one should deliver his Judgment freely, touching the Means of Suppressing the Rebels; Epigenes speaking first, gave it as his Opinion, That it was an Affair that would not endure delay, and that the Remedies ought speedily to be applied to the Disease: That he Conceiv'd the King's Presence was absolutely necessary, whose Authority on the place would weigh much: That in such case neither Molon nor his Partizans would have the affurance to perfift in their Errour, beholding the King himfelf at the Head of his Army: Or should they chance to continue obstinate, the very Soldiers would Mutiny, and deliver them up to the King.

Hardly had Epigenes finish'd his Discourse, when Hermias in passionate manner reply'd, That this was not the first Traiterous Counsel he had given: That he had long harbour'd Evil Purposes towards the King: That it now

pleas'd

POLYBIUS's General History Vol. II.

pleas'd him however to behold him openly. declaring his Wickedness in the pernicious Ad. vice he had offer'd, wherein he plainly shew'd his Delign of giving up the King into the Hands of the Rebels. He added nothing further at that time on that Subject, feeming content to have thus fown the Seeds of Sufpi. cion and Calumny against him, expressing rather his Indignation than Hatred. In a Word. his Ignorance in Military Affairs (it may be) gave him greater Apprehension of the Danger than needed: Wherefore his Advice was, That no Army should be sent against Molon, but that they should March against Ptolomy; who being a Vicious and Careless Prince, he concluded that War would be Manag'd with less danger. Howbeit, after he had thus aftonish'd the Assembly, he yielded that Molon should be Profecuted by War, and that the Chief Command in that Expedition should be given to Xeno and Theodotus, Counfelling the King to pursue the Recovery of the Lower Syria, to the end that Young Prince being Engag'd and Surrounded with Troubles from all Quarters, and keeping him in perpetual Action, he might, as he conceiv'd, render himself the more necessary, and cover with more fafety, the Crimes of which he was Conscious, and better secure his Credit with his Master. Pursuant to which Design, he Forges Letters from Achaus, and brought them to the King; which Letters contain'd King ol. II.

penly.

as Ad-

hew'd

o the

g forming Suspi-

lg ra-Vord,

v be)

Dan-

was,

Tolon.

omy;

, he with

afto-

Tolon

the

d be ling

wer

ing

om

rual

ith

Vas

ith

he

ht

d

ng

3

Ring Ptolomy's Solicitations to him, to take on him the Royalty, promising him his Assistance both of Money, Ships, and all things he should stand in need of, provided he would assume the Crown, and the other Marks of Regality, whereof he was in effect already Posses's, tho' he shun'd the Title, and neglected the Tender of a Diadem which Formune her self made him. This Letter sound so much Credit with the King, that he therewoon determin'd forthwith earnestly to pursue the War in Calo-Syria.

While these Matters were under agitation, Antiochus being at Seleucia, Diognetus his General at Sea arriv'd, bringing with him Laodice the Daughter of Mithridates, who was Espous'd to Antiochus. This Mithridates boafted of his being Descended from one of the Seven Perfians, who flew the Magi, holding Possession of that Dominion, which Darius had heretofore given to his Ancestors, extending as far as the Coast of the Euxine Sea. Antiochus went in great Pomp to receive this Princess, whom he presently Marry'd, the Nuptials being Solemniz'd with all possible Magnificence. As foon as the Ceremony was over, he carry'd her to Antioch, where he caus'd her to be receiv'd as Queen; and then turn'd his Thoughts to prepare for the War. In the mean time Molon had prepar'd the People of his Government for every thing he might be dispos'd to attempt, as well by the ho pes hopes of Reward, as through the fear where with he had poffes'd the Principal Officers by angry and menacing Letters counterfeited from the King. Furthermore, his Brother was in a readiness to join him; and he had well provided against all danger that might threaren from the Neighbour-Provinces, h. ving been at great Expence to Purchase the Good Will of those, who had any Authority among them; and, in a Word, March'd with his Army to Incounter the King's Forces. While Xeno and Theodotus were fo terrify'd at his approach, that they retir'd and fecur'd themselves in the Neighbouring Towns. Whereupon Molon making himself Master of the Territory of Apollonia, became supply'd with all forts of Provisions of Warin great abundance, and was already grown formidable in appearance, and in effect: For, first the King's breed of Horses was intirely in posselfion of the Medes; which Country moreover abounds in Corn and all forts of Cattel. As to its Strength, all that can be faid, would not amount to half what the Subject will bear, Media is Situate in the heart of Afia, and if comparison be made between that and the other parts, it will be found to furpals all the Provinces thereof, both in extent of Territory and height of the Mountains that furround it. They lave many powerful Nations that are their Borderers: On the East are the Defarts which lie between Perha and Paraha. ol. II.

where

fficers

ricital

rother

ne had

might

s, hi-

fe the hority

with orces.

y'd at

cur'd owns.

ter of ply'd

at a.

dable

the

offel

oreo-

attel.

ould

bear.

nd if

the

the

Tito-

ound

that

De

afia.

The

The Caspian Pass call'd the Gates, is in their keeping, where they touch on the Mountains Tapyræ, which are not far from Hyrcania. It extends towards the South to Mesopotamia, and the Territory of the Apolloniates. Nor is it remote from Perha, being cover'd on that fide by the Mountain Zagros, which hath an ascent of above twelve Miles. And whereas this Mountain is divided and broken into many Parts and Eminencies, it comes to pass that there are divers Vallies and deep Descents. which are inhabited by the Coffai, Corbrena and Carchi, and other Barbarous Nations, who are generally given to War. Towards the West they approach the Country of Atropatii, who are not far from those People, whose Dominion extends as far as the Euxine Sea. The Frontiers of Media towards the North, are in the Neighbourhood of the Elymai, Ariarace, Cadducei, Matiani, and in short, overlook those Countries on the Pontic Sea, that join the Palus Mæotis. The Country is also parted into fundry Divisions, by Mountains, which run through it from East to West, between which there are Plains abounding with Cities, and Peopled Places.

As foon as Molon had made himself Master of this Country, the most proper of all others wherein to establish the Seat of his Dominion; over and above that, he was become formidable, as was noted, by the Power he had acquird; he grew likewise into such Reputation,

that

that the People of Aha believ'd he was not to be refisted; especially when they saw the King's Army had been forc'd to Retreat into Towns for fafety; which they took for granted, was no other than yielding up the Field This Success greatly augmented the Courage and Expectations of his Army. Wherefore he refolv'd to pass the Tigris, and march to the Seige of Seleucia. But being prevented in that Design by Zeuxes, who had seiz'd on the Vessels of Transportation, he retir'd to Place call'd Crefiphon, where he made plentiful Provision of all Necessaries for the Wintering of his Army. When the King came to understand that Molon Advanc'd, and that his own Army retir'd, he then resolv'd to go at the Head of his Forces, and to respite for a while, his Expedition against Ptolomy. But Hermias continu'd firm to his Purpose, and prevail'd to divert him; fo Xenatas an Achaian, was fent with an Army, having as ablolute Authority as if the King had been there in Person; Hermias demonstrating that 'twas enough for Princes to make War against Rebels by their Lieutenants, but that Kings ought to oppose themselves only to their Equals, where Glory and Empire is the Subject in Dispute. Thus having the young Prince intirely in his Possession, he prevail'd to carry on his first Design, so they went to Apamea, where they Assembled the Troops. From thence the King lead his Army to Laodicea, then marching ing through the Defart, they came to the Valley of Marfya between the Mountains Libanus and Anti-Libanus, a Place very streight and inclos'd by those Mountains which come almost to touch; and there where it is narmwest, it is full of low and watery Ground, where they gather Odoriferous Dew. Castle of Brochi Commands on the one fide of the Streight, on the other that of Gerra : there being only a narrow way between them. After some time had been spent in their March through this Vale, and the taking in some Neighbouring Towns, the King approached Gerra: but both the one and the other Fortress being in the Hands of Theodotus the Atolian, who had likewise well Fortify'd the Defilée about the low Grounds, and Posted Troops Commodioufly for Defence, the King resolv'd to force his Passage. But when he had well consider'd, that by Seiges he should Harrass his Army, and be more a Sufferer himfelf than the Enemy; and having some Reasons to believe that Theodotus would shortly be wrought over to his Service, he forbore to Profecute that Enterprize; fo that having no prefent Prospect of succeeding here, and receiving notice of the Defeat of Xenætas, and that Molow Victorious had fubdu'd many Provinces; herefolv'd to relinquish all other Designs, and deliberate on those Affairs which more nearly concern'd him. For Xenætas, as we noted, beingsfent with an Authority full and absolute, could the into antield:

ot to

. It.

rage efore the in

on to a entiiter-

e to t his o at

or a But and

bai blo-

here Was bels

t to here ute.

his first hey

the rch-

ing

210 POLYBIUS's General History Vol.II.

could not well bear that Degree of Greatnes, which he had never hop'd to attain, but grew infolent towards his Friends, and acted inconsiderately against the Enemy. For taking his march towards Seleucia, having Diogenes Governour of Susiana, and Pythias with him, who brought his Troops from the Coast of the Red-Sea, under his Command; he came and encamp'd in view of the Enemy, being cover'd on that fide by the Tigris.

In the mean time many Deferters from Molon's Army, fwimming the River, came over to Xenetas, who gave him affurance, that in case he pass'd the River with his Army, the greatest part of the Enemies Troops would revolt to him, many of the Leaders being difoblig'd by Molon; and that the Soldiers in general were dispos'd to return to their Duty. Xenætas, incourag'd by these Reports, refolv'd to pass over the Army, and shew'd a purpose to make a Bridge at a certain place where by the force of the Stream the Earth is cast up in form of an Island, but he did not profecute that Defign: Whereupon Molos made a Jest of his Project. Nevertheless. Xenætas, in the mean time, caus'd Boats to be built, and feiz'd on others where they could be found, to put in execution what he had purpos'd. Then picking out a Body of the best Troops of the Army, both Horse and Foot, and leaving Zenxes and Pythias with the rest to guard the Camp, he wasted over his his Men by Night, marching and encamping bout Ten Miles above the Enemy, where he made choice of a commodious and well-defended piece of Ground to encamp in; for the River inviron'd it almost quite round, and the rest was secur'd by a Moor, and deep boggy Ground. Molon, upon knowledge hereof, detach'd a Body of Horse with Command to march towards the Enemy, partly to prevent the passing of those that remain'd behind; and partly to attack those who were already But on their approach to Xenætas's Camp there was no need of the Swords of an Enemy to defeat them; for being, it feems, unacquainted with the Ground and Country about it, they chanc'd to fall among the Bogs and watery places, whereby not only their Design miscarried, but most of the Party were loft. Wherefore Xenætas, now perfuaded, that if he drew nearer to the Enemies Camp, the greatest part of the Army would defert to him, took his march along the River, and came and Encamp'd close by them. Whereupon Molon, either out of Stratagem, or some real doubt of the Soldiers Disposition, left his Camp by Night, with all his Baggage, feeming to take his march towards Media. Renatas now believing that Molon had forfaken his Camp through tear upon his approach, or through distrust of his own Troops, rook possession thereof, where he quarter'd his Army, giving his Orders, that the Horse and Bag-

him. ft of ame eing

Mo-

I.H.

nes.

zrew

d in-

king

renes

over t in the ould difrs in

uty. red a lace arth

not olon lefs. s to

had the and vith

ver

his

ould

212 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. II.

Baggage of Zenxes Camp should forthwith pass over and joyn him. Then assembling the Soldiers, he incourag'd them, by giving them hopes of a good issue of the War, for that Molon had already thought it his safest course to sly before them; so commanding them to resresh and repose themselves, he order'd them to be in a readiness to march by break of Day in pursuit of the Enemy.

And now the Army of Xenætas, full of Affurance, and being posses'd of so great plenty of all things, fell to Feasting and making Merry, Drinking to excess, and acting in e very thing the parts of careless dissolute People. While Molon, when he thought he was got far enough, made an halt; and taking some space to refresh his People, sac'd about, and march'd directly back by the way be came; and advancing to the Camp, found the Enemy negligently scatter'd here and there, plung'd in Sleep and Wine. Where fore attacking them at Day-break. Xenæta, astonish'd at the surprize, and not able to > waken and draw his Troops together to make head against the Enemy, lost his Life, gallantly fighting. The greatest part of the Army were cut off in their Tents, the rell casting themselves into the River, hop'd to gain the Camp on the other fide, but very few escap'd over. Here might be seen the diver Scenes of Tumult and Confusion in the Army: for all had their share of Terror, at an 1.11.

hwith

ziving

r, for fafelt

nding

e orull of plen-

aking

in e-

Peo-

e Was

aking

bout,

v he found

and

here

etas.

to 1

make, gal-

f the

'd to

v few

divers e Ar-

at an

As

Attempt fo unlook'd for: And while they view'd their Camp on the other Bank of the River, without regard to the violence of the Stream, or the difficulty and danger of the Passage, such was their Passion to escape the Swords of the Enemy; their fear, I fay, had b blinded their Judgment, that to fave themfelves from the hands of those that pursu'd them, they committed themselves to the Waters, making their Horses, Baggage, and all attempt to pass the River, as if they thought some special Providence had commanded the Flood to yield them fuccour, and waft them afe to the other Shore; fo that it was a lamenble fight to behold at once Men, Horses, Arms, Baggage, the Dead and Living floating and mingled together in confusion.

Molon becoming Master of Xenætas's Camp, afterwards pass'd the River without impediment, none withstanding him; for Zenxes, who might have hinder'd him, was sled; wherefore he took possession likewise of the other Camp. Then upon this Success he march'd speedily to Seleucia, which soon sell into his hands; for that Zenxes and Diomedon, who was Governour of the Place, had deserted it. Then reducing the upper Provinces to his Obedience, where he found none to oppose him, he march'd on, and subdu'd the whole Country of Babylon, and all the Territory extending as far as the Red-Sea. From thence he march'd to Susa, which was taken

0 3

POLYBIUS's General History Vol.II.

taken by Affault, as other Places had been; but he in vain attempted the Fortress of that Place, for that Diogenes the Governour had made timely provision for his Desence: Wherefore he sorbore to use force, but leaving Troops to block it up, took his march back to Seleucia, where he resresh'd and recruited his Army; and then after he had well encourag'd them, he proceeded on surther Enterprizes. Thus Molon reduc'd all the Country to the City Europus, and all Mesopotamia as far as Durante.

When Antiochus came to be well inform'd of these Occurrences, he quitted the barren Country of the Lower-Syria, (as we have noted) and turn'd his Thoughts wholly on this War. Wherefore affembling his Council once again to deliberate about it, and requiring every one to deliver his Opinion plainly touching the War of Molon; Epigenes again first gave his Judgment, saying, That it had been well for the King's Service, if they had follow'd his first Advice without any delay or loss of time; for the Enemy had made fo great a progress, that he was confirm'd in his former Opinion; namely, That it was most necessary the King should march with the Army, and manage the War in Person. But Hermias thereupon renew'd his Indignation against Epigenes, charging and blaming him as heretofore; and came to exaggerate his own Praises to that degree, that every body een :

II.k

that had

here-

COOPS

eleu.

rmy;

hem,

Thus

City

Du-

rm'd

rren

no-

this

nce

g e ich-

gain

t it

hey

de-

ade

in

Was-

ith

on.

iti-

despised him; and contesting with the King himself, labour'd all he could to make him persevere in his Syrian Expedition; infomuch, that great Offence was taken by Antiochus himself, who notwithstanding interpos'd his Authority in vain to reconcile them, Hermias being by no means to be wrought from his Aversion to Epigenes. Howbeit, his Advice at length prevail'd, as being the most safe and profitable; which Hermias not being able now longer to hinder, feem'd on the fudden to accord entirely to what he cou'd not prevent; and becoming (as one may fay) another Man, refolv'd, that laying afide all other Affairs, the War with Molon ought to be vigorously prosecuted: Wherefore he apply'd himself with great diligence, and turn'd all his Thoughts to make preparation for carrying it on.

And now when the King's Troops were afsembl'd at Apamea, there grew a Mutiny in the Army about the Arrears of Pay. Whereupon Hermias perceiving the King to be furpriz'd, and to feek what to do, made an Offer to him, proposing to satisfie the Soldiers Arrears out of his own private Fortune, provided he would yield that Epigenes might not be employ'd in that Expedition; pretending, that the Differences which had happen'd between them, would be the occasion of Difputes, that would greatly hinder him in the management of his Affairs. The King, in truth,

0 4

ng his

dy

King.

All of the King's Council were ill satisfy'd with this Resolution, while, on the other hand, the Soldiers, who had receiv'd satisfaction of their Demands, express'd great Assection towards Hermias, by whose means they had obtain'd their Arrears. Nor was there any remaining Stirs, saving among the Cyrrhesta, of whom there revolted from the King's Service to the number of Six Thousand, who for a while gave him some Trouble; but being pursu'd and attack'd, they were deseated by those that were sent against them, the greatest part being cut off, and the remainder returning to their Obedience.

And now Hermias, having subdu'd those about the King by his Authority, and gain'd the Good-will of the Soldiers by his Bounty, departed with Antiochus and the Army; but forgot not, by means of Alexu, who was Governour of the Citadel of Apamea, to form

this

ol. IL

ne Pro-

to take

in Min able about

foluti-

ceffity.

rmias.

m the tisfy'd

other

fatif-

at Af-

means r was

g the

afand.

; but

efeat-

, the

inder

thole

ain'd inty,

but

Was

orm this

this Delign for the Destruction of Epigenes. He forg'd a Letter from Molon to Epigenes ; and having corrupted one of his Servants by Promifes of a great Reward, gives him the Letter, with Orders to lay it among the rest of his Mafter's Papers. Whereupon Alexis comes to Epigenes, and demands of him if he had not receiv'd Letters from Molon ? To which Epigenes reply'd with Indignation, That he held no intercourse with Rebels. lexis boldly affirming the contrary, demanded leave to fearch; and ent'ring by force into his Lodgings, he found the Letter; with which pretext he immediately kill'd Epigenes on the place, the King being perswaded to think him Guilty. And tho' the principal Men about him were aw'd into Silence, and did not dare tomove therein, nevertheless the Action gave them great Jealousie and Offence.

Upon the Army's arrival at Euphrates, Antiochus join'd the Troops that he found there, and pursu'd his march; and coming near Antioch in Mygdonia, Winter being now at hard, he there remain'd till the Colds were over, and in forty Days after arriv'd at Liba. Here he fell to deliberate with his Officers what course was best to take to find out Molon, and by what means they should sustain the Army in their march; for Molon was in possession of all the Country about Babylon. Hermias propos'd to keep along the River Tigru, by which means they should have the benefit of

that

218 POLYBIUS's General History Vola

that River, and two others, Lycus and I pros, to cover and defend their Camp. Be Zeuxes, tho' he wanted affurance to delive his Mind as he ought, having the Fate of En genes before his Eyes; nevertheless, such we the Weakness and Danger of Hermias's Al vice, that with fome difficulty he reply'd That there was a necessity of their passing the Tigris; and made appear the great Impedments they should meet with, in holding the march along the River. He principally urg'd. that after a long and tedious Journey, and march of fix Days through a continu'd De fart, they would come to a place call'd, The King's Ditch; which place, if it should chance to be possess'd by the Enemy, would entirely bar their further Progress; which might be the means of expoling the Army to great danger, by their being compell'd to return by the Defart, where (which was especially to be consider'd) they should be reduc'd to want every needful thing. On the other hand, he made appear, That in case they pass'd the Tigris, it was more than probable, that those of the Country of Apollonia would fee their Error, and return to their Duty, who, it was plain, were compell'd, and not out of Good will, but out of Fear and Necessity, had taken part with Molon. Furthermore, being to march through a plentiful Country, there would be no danger of being driven to streight for any thing. And what was of further importirely ht be t dan

y the

to be

Want

d, he

the

thole

their

Was

ood-

aken

to

here

ghts

impor-

and a mance, when Molon should see his passage p. he into Media shur up, and behold himself delive afreights for Provision, he would be consider the comments the issue of a Bertel delive integrats for Provision, he would be conof Entin'd either to come to the issue of a Battel, in case of resusal, would hazard the desertia's Ad not his Troops to the King.

This Advice of Zeuxes was approv'd, puring the mped into to which the Army being divided into mped into Baggage in three several places. So they mecuted their march towards Dura, which and the sat that time streighten'd by one of Mon and the at that time streighten'd by one of Mod De wis Officers, who on their march withhance out halting, they pass'd by Oricum in eight Days and came to Apollonia. And now Mobeing inform'd of the King's Arrival, and not being very well affur'd of the Good-will of the Sufians and Babylonians, whom he had but lately reduc'd, and who were furpriz'd into submission; and surther, searing the Eremies'delign of blocking up his Pallage back into Media, he resolv'd to lay a Bridge over the Tigris, and passing his Army, determin'd ngain the Mountains of Apollonia before Antischus should arrive; for he rely'd much en his Slingers, which they call Cyrthis. Whereopen putting in execution what had been rebly'd, he march'd the Army away with great diligence. But the King chancing to move with all his Troops about the same time from Apol-

220 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. 11

Apollonia, that Molon's Army approach'd the Mountains, certain advanc'd Parties of choice Men of either Army happen'd to meet on These had some dispute, and the Hills. pickeer'd for a while, but on the approach of the gross of the Army, they retir'd, and the two Armies Encamp'd sout five Mile afunder. But Molon, during the Night mate reflection, how dangerous it was for Ma in Rebellion to march against their Prince is broad-day and give him Battel; wherefor he became of Opinion, that the much fale course would be to fall on Antiochus by Night which was accordingly refolv'd; fo dend ing a Body of felect Troops, he lead then by fecret ways towards the Mountains, and from thence determin'd to fall on the Enmies Camp from high Ground. But whik he was on his March, he was given to understand, That Ten of his People had de ferted and stole away to the King; where upon he defisted, and return'd back by the way he came; but coming to the Camp about break of Day, he fill'd the whole Army with Fear and Tumult: For being furpriz'd land awaken'd with the Noik, the Terror grew to that degree, that they had like to have abandon'd their Works; but by Molon's Care and Diligence all was ap peas'd.

d de

where-

y the

Camp

whole

being

Voik,

they

; but

s ap-

ch'd the fig the mean while the King, who was preof choice and to come to a Battel, order'd his Troops meet on march out by break of day. On the right te, and the Battel he rang'd the Lanciers under pprosed the Leading of Ardyes, of whose Conduct in d, and war he had received sufficient Proofs. After Mile the he posted the Candiots, who had been at made fent pursuant to the Treaty of Peace. or Ma vere join'd by the Galatians and Tectofages; ince is adnext these he plac'd the Mercenary Stran-tereson gers, who were brought from Greece. The ch fale ting himself was at the head of a strong Bat-Night, alion, where the Cohorts were dispos'd after the detach time manner. On the left he posted the Horse, then that are call'd the Troops of the King's Allies, is, and ordering his Elephants by tens, with Intervals Ene between them, a little advanc'd before the while Battel. On the Wings were posted the Auto us riliary Troops, both Horse and Foot, who had Orders to attack the Enemy in Flank, is foon as the Battel should begin. Then the King going from Rank to Rank, spoke to the Soldiers, and in few words, as the time and occasion permitted, animated them to their Duty. He gave the leading of the Left-Wing to Hermias and Zeuxes, remaining himself in the Right.

Molon also march'd out his Army, and mng'd them with difficulty enough, by reafon of the last Night's disorder; nevertheless, he form'd his Troops according to the Meafures the other Army had taken, and plac'd

his

212 POLYBRUS's General History Volu his Buckler-men, Galatians, and heavy-arm'd Soldiers in the Centre. He distributed his Anchers, Slingers, and all his light-arm'd Troop without the Horse, on the Right and Lest posted his Chariots arm'd with Sithes, advanced before the Line of Battel. He gave the Command of the Lest to Neolaus his Brother, no ferving the Right to himself.

Being thus drawn up, the Battel began! and, in a word, the Right of Molon's Arm preserv'd their Fidelity to the last, engaging Zeuxes with great Resolution. But the Left no fooner advanc'd near the King, when the deserted and went over to him; which Acc dent, as it greatly terrify'd Molon's Army, to it increas'd the Courage of the King's. now Molon, beholding himself deferted, and as it were abandon'd on all fides, and reflect ing on the Punishment that awaited him, fear ing to fall alive into the Enemies hands, kill'd himself; and all who had been Complices with him, and cou'd escape home, ended their Days after the like manner. Neolan faving himself out of the Battel, got into Perha, and came to Alexander his Brother, where he kill'd the Wife and Children of Molon, and afterwards dy'd himfelf on their dead Bodies, ha ving persuaded Alexander to do the like. After the King had pillag'd the Enemies Camp, he order'd Molon's Body to be fix'd on a Cross and plac'd on one of the highest Mountains of Media; which was immediately put in execution old the Body being carry'd into the Counarmid of the Chalonitidi, and plac'd on the most inspicuous part of the Mountain Zagra, where roop was fix'd on a Cross.

As to the Rebel-Army, after the King had Con-erroly reproved them, he vouchfal'd them his bem back into Media, who were to remain here to regulate the Affairs of that Pro-

ince.

Left;

vanc'd

r, 10

egen;

Army

aging

e Lat

they

Acc-

y, 6

And

, and

fled.

fear

killd

olices

nded

olans

Per-

here

and

s,ha-

After

, he

rofs. s of ecution In the mean time the King return'd to Sewia, where he apply'd himself to the esta-Whing the Affairs of the neighbouring Proinces, practifing his customary Prudence and Demency. As to Hermias, he continu'd the me Man still, loading the Seleucians with many Accusations, and condemning them in fine of two thousand Talents, sending their Diganes (for so their Magistrates are call'd) no Banishment; and exercising his natural Creeky on many of the Citizens, dismemring some, and putting others to death. But the end the King's Humanity prevail'd, nd put a period to those Evils, sometimes by ordering things his own way, fometimes by interpoling to fosten the Severities of Herin; and contented himself with diminishing the Mulct of the Selencians to five hundred Talents; on the payment whereof he receiv'd. hem into Grace.

After

224 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. 11

After these things, Diogenes being lest Go vernor in Media, Apollodorus in Susa, and Ty. cho the King's Chancellor being fent into the Countries bordering on the Red Sea, an en tire Period was given to the Rebellion of M. lon, and all the Troubles that fell out there upon were compos'd. Antiochus encourag'd by this Success, that he might terrifie the Princes of the Barbarians bordering on his Dominions, and deterr them for the future from taking part with his Rebellious Subjects or entring into Alliance with them, he refolv'd to invade them. And first he proposit to attack Artabazanes, who was esteem'd for periour to the rest both in Power and Military Abilities, being over and above Lord of the People they call Atropatii, and other neighbouring Nations. But Hermias unwillingly engag'd in that War, as well in regard of the Danger it threatned, as for that his Mind wa more bent on that against Prolomy, according to the Refolution that had been formerly to ken: Nevertheless, on the News of the Queen's having brought a Son, and conceiving the King would run some hazard of his Person in a War with the Barbarians, he came to promote the Proposition of invading them, if hopes of being deliver'd of Antiochus; propoling that in case he could by any means to rid of him, the Government of the Empire and Tuition of the Infant-Prince would fall w his share. Wherefore after all things were

ol. II

eft Go

and Ty.

nto the

an en

of Me

there

ourag'd

fie the

on his future bject,

he re

opos'd

n'd fo

ilitary

of that

neighlingly

of the

d wa

ordina

rly ta

ueen's

ig the

lon in pro

n, n

pro

ns be n pire

all to

Were

pre

prepar'd for the Expedition, the Army march'd over the Mountain Zagra, and fell on the Territory subject to Artabazanes. The Counmy lies on the Borders of the Medes, separated only by a ridge of Hills that lie between them. lextends on the one fide to the Pontus, where the River Phasis runs into that Sea; and fretcheth as far as the Caspian Sea. The Region abounds in good Soldiers, especially Horse; it is plentifully flor'd with Provisions. and all things needful to fustain a War, the Kingdom having continu'd ever fince the difcolution of the Perfian Empire, having it feems been neglected by Alexander. But Artabazenes being old, and towards the period of his Days, and terrify'd'at the Kings arrival, thought it fafest to Worthit, and purchase Peace with Antiochus, off what soever Conditions he should please to impose.

After this Affair was accommodated, Apollaphanes, the King's beloved Physician, perteiving Hermias to aspire yet beyond that degree of Power and Greatness to which he had been rais'd, began to fear, and take thought for the King's fafety and his own; wherefore taking a proper occasion, he imparted his Jealousie to Antiochus, praying him not to rely over-confidently on Hermias's Fidelity, concerning which, there wanted not grounds of distrust: That, in short, it behov'd him to be on his guard, and not to defer the means of his Preservation, lest he fell into the like Snare with his Brother: He told him he thought the Danger at hand, wherefore he conjur'd him to determine win speed touching the means of his own and he Friends Preservation.

fell

226 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. 1

Antiochus hereupon dissembled not to Physician the Hatred he bare to Hermias, and that he had long entertain'd fuspicion Thoughts of him: He told him he took in good part his care for his fafety, and prist his Refolution in opening to frankly his Thoughts. This Discourse confirm'd Apole phanes that he had oblig'd the King, and that his Sentiments were conformable with his own; which gave him both Joy and & furance. In conclusion, Antiochus enjoining him to have a careful ave to his and his Friend Preservation, not only in words, but in effect And Apollophanes manifesting his readiness act any part to infure his fafety, they came after a long conference, to agree, That the King should feign himself indispos'd in hi Head, infomuch that for a while none were to be admitted to his Chamber. Howbeit, length such of the King's Servants as he mot esteem'd, were to be permitted to wait on him; by which means they dealt apart with fuch as they thought fit; and when they had imparted the Conspiracy to those who were propos'd to be engag'd, (which was not han to bring to pass through the general Hamd Hermias had contracted) they deliberated how

Vol.I

er: He

t hand.

ne with

and his

t to ias, and (picios

took in

praisi

kly h

Apole

Z, and

ole with

and AL

nioinin

Friends

n effet.

inest 7 came hat the

in h

C Were

beit, at ne most

vait on t win

ey had

o wat

ot hard

Hatre

perata

how

how to put it in execution, The Physicians then advis'd the King to take the Morning's Air, while the Season was yet cool, and to wilk abroad early: So that Hermias was not wanting to give his attendance at the Hour appointed; and with him those to whom the King had communicated his purpose, but none ele, in regard the King's walking out was defign'd to be fooner than ordinary. Hermias was led abroad; and coming to a bnely place, where the King stepping aside. son fome necessary occasion, he was in the mean time kill'd by those who were about him: a Punishment in truth too gentle for his Crimes.

The King now deliver'd of this Troubler of his Affairs, resolv'd to lead his Army home. all the Provinces through which he pass'd receiving him with Acclamations of Praise, and applauding principally his Justice in taking Hermias out of the World; whose Wife and Children were at the same time ston'd to death by the Women of Apamea.

Upon Antiochus's return home, he dispos'd his Army into Winter-Quarters, and fent to expostulate with Achaus about his invading the Crown, and prefuming to call himself King. Afterwards he let him understand, that the League he had made with Ptolomy, was come to his knowledge; and charg'd him with many other Acts contrary to Juflice, and in violation of his Duty. It feems that that at what time the War was undertaken a. gainst Artabazanes; Achaeus imagining the King might miscarry in that Expedition; and tho' that should not happen, yet the King being thereby drawn fo far out of the way. would give him a fafe opportunity to fall on Syria, and feize on that Kingdom for himfelf. aided therein by the Cyrrhesta, who at that time had withdrawn their Obedience from the King: Wherefore with this Determination he march'd his Army out of Lydia. Further. more, he caus'd himself to be Crown'd at Las dicea of Phrygia, receiving and giving Audience to Ambassadors; and in his Letters to the Cities, he assum'd the Regal Title; flatter'd principally into this Attempt by the Instigations of a certain Exile call'd Syniris. But after some days march, and that they now approach'd Lycaonia, there happen'd a Mutiny in his Army, the Soldiers refusing, it seems, to be led against him, whom Nature had de stin'd for their King. Whereupon Achem perceiving the Army to have chang'd their Mind, chang'd also his Purpose; and to perfuade them that he never defignd to invade Syria, he took another way, and march'd and plunder'd Pifidia. After which Expedition, having inrich'd the Soldiers with Booty, and confirm'd their Affection, he return'd home.

228 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. II.

The King then, who was well inform'd of all these Passages, had, as was noted, let Atheus know fo much by menacing Messages, and in the mean while prepar'd for the War egainst Ptolomy. To which purpose, early in the Spring, he affembled his Troops at Apamea, and call'd a Council to deliberate on the best way to make his entrance for the invading of Syria; on which subject were long Debates of the Nature of the Country, Situation of Places; of the Provision to make, and of what Benefit a Fleet would be towards the furtherance of the Enterprize. But the Advice of Apollophanes the Seleucian, the Physician we have already had occasion to name, prevail'd above the rest; who maintain'd, that the Design on Calo-Syria was vain; and it would be an unprofitable Expedition to make War there, while they left Ptolomy in quiet possession of Seleucia, a Royal City, and in effect the Metropolis of the Kingdom: That not to mention the Dishonour to have that City in the hands of an Ægyptian King, the recovery thereof would redound greatly to the Service of the King's Affairs in many Points: That in the interim, while it remain'd in the Enemies hands, it would be a mighty Impediment to the progress of the King's Success in the Enterprize he was upon: For which way foever he had a mind to carry the War, he would find it necessary (over and above all other Preparations) to strengthen all his

e King e way, fall on imfelf, t that

ol. II.

ken a.

ig the

and;

m the ion he orther t Lan g Auers to flathe In-

But now Mutieems, id de

their per-

d and ition,

ooty, urn'd

The

Towns with extraordinary Garrisons, meety on the account of the Danger that would threaten from Seleucia: But that if Antiochus made the recovery of that Place his first Busness, it would not only serve as a Bulwark and Frontier against all the other Towns of the Kingdom, but would mainly enable him to prosecute his Enterprize both by Sea and Land.

The Opinion of Apollophanes then was by common Consent approv'd; and it was refolv'd to open the Campaign with the Seige of Seleucia. The Kings of Ægypt had held constant Garrison in this Town, ever since Prals. my, call'd Euergetes, offended with Selences for the Death of Berenice, became Master thereof: who on that Provocation, had invaded Syria. When it was refolv'd then that Apollophanes's Counsel should be follow'd, An tiochus order'd Diognetus his Admiral, to Sail with the Fleet to Seleucia, while himself march'd with the Army from Apamea, and came and Encamp'd near Circus. Theodotus was likewife fent with a sufficient Body of Troops into the Lower Syria, with Orders to take Possession of the Streights, and to have an Eye to all Motions in those Parts. As to the Situation of Seleucia, and the Country about it, take it a little more or less, as follows, Seleucia stands on the Sea-Coast, on the Frontiers of Cilicia and Phanicia, in the Neighbourhood of a very high Mountain call'd

ol. I

maerly

Would

tiochu

t Buf

rk and

of the

nim to a and

as by

as m ige of

COD.

Proje.

encus

lafter

d in-

that

Ar

Sail

nfelf

and

otus

of

to to

ave

to try

ol-

he he

in

all'd Coryphaus; one fide of which Mountain mwards the West, is wash'd by the Sea between Cyprus and Phanicia; the other towards the East, regards the Territory of Seleucia and Antioch. Seleucia stands on the Southfide of this Mountain, between which and the City is a deep Vale, waste and full of broken Ground, which extends to the Sea, indos'd almost on all sides with Rocks and Predpices. On that side of the City towards the See, the Ground is low and watery, where there is a Suburb Fortify'd with a good Wall, like that of the City it felf. Seleucia surpasses ill the Cities of Syria in the Magnificence of her Temples and other Buildings. It hath but one Communication with the Sea, which is Paffage wrought out of the Rock in manner of Stairs. Not far off is feen the Mouth of the River Orontes, whose Head is in the Country about Libanus and Anti-Libanus, taking its Course through the Plain of Amycæ; and running to Antioch, divides that City as it were into two, which it cleanses of all their Filthand Rubbish, and at length discharges it felf, not far from Seleucia, into the Sea we mention'd.

Now before Antiochus would proceed with Hostility against Selencia, he first sent Offers of Rewards to the Principal Men of the City, and Promises of surther suture Advantages, to win them to yield it up without strife or resi, stance. But finding he labour'd that way in vain,

P 4

II L

-

1

wain, he corrupted several of their Military Officers, who had Posts distinct, and Commanded in fundry Quarters of the City; and in confidence of their Compliance, drew out and order'd his Troops as for an Attack, To the Seaward the Marine Forces were appointed: towards the Land, those of the Camp were order'd to make the Affault. So make ing three Divisions of his Army, and animating the Soldiers according to Custom, and Proclaiming by a Herauld, Promise of extraordinary Recompences, as Crowns, and fuch like Rewards to the Officers and Soldiers, who should best behave themselves. He gave to Xeuxes, and those under him, the Attack of the Gate that leads to Antioch; to Hermoge. nes, that of those parts that are nearest the Temple of Caffor and Pollux; and to Ardis and Diognetus, the Ars'nal and Suburbs; for it was agreed with the Conspirators, that as foon as the Suburbs should be won, the Town should be Surrendred. And now the Signal being given, the Attack began in all placesat once, and was press'd with great forwardness and bravery. But Ardys and Diognetus fignaliz'd themselves above the rest, both in Resolution and Address. Tho' indeed in other places they could not come to the foot of the Wall to erect their Ladders, without coming to Blows with the Enemy; but at the Ars'ml and Suburbs they approach'd, and applyd their Ladders without Impediment: So that while on, and out, To imp nak-

mı-

and tra-

uch

ho

to

of ge-

lys or

'n al

at

G

n n

e

while the Marine Soldiers Scal'd the Ars'nal. and Ardys the Suburbs, and those of the Town not being able to come to their Relief. being themselves press'd on all Quarters, Arhs, after some Dispute, became Master of the Suburbs; whereupon the Officers who had been gain'd by the King, and Commanded in feveral Posts of the City, came to Leintins the Governour, pressing their Opinion, that there was now no fafe way left, but to fend immediately to the King to Treat, before the Town should be taken by Assault: Whereupon Leontius, who was ignorant of the Treachery, being frighted with their feeming Fear, dispatch'd a Message to Antiochus, with Proposals of Conditions that no Violence should be done to any, and that the Inhabitants should be Safe in their Persons.

The King on fight of the Proposals, promis'd that no manner of Injury should be done to any one of free Condition, which were to the number of Six Thousand. And in a word, when the Place was deliver'd up, he did not only deal graciously with those, but recall'd their Exiles, and restor'd the City to its Privileges, and the Inhabitants to their Estates and Authority, leaving only Garrisons both in the Port and Citadel. While the King was busied in these Affairs, Letters were brought him from Theodotus, by which he was Solicited to march with what Expedition he could into Syria, giving him affurance that

日本品前門

de Fr

TE W W IO W

0

on his Arrival, he would deliver the Kingdon intirely to his Possession. This News 200 the King some trouble and suspence, uncertain what to refolve, on the intimation he had receiv'd. Theodotus was by Birth an Atolia who tho' he had done Eminent Service to the Ægyptian Kings, nevertheless his Recompences were not only short of his Merits, be coming to Court, as we have elsewhere noted he there ran great hazard of his life. Where upon when Antiochus was on his Expedition against Molon, Theodorus having no very good opinion of the state of Ptolomy's Affairs, and icalous of his Interest at Court, had himself taken Ptolemais, and won Tyre by the help of Panætolus, and had now earnestly invited Antiochus. Who therefore respiting for that time his Expedition against Achaus, and all his other Affairs; he march'd with his Army, taking the same way he had gone before. And having pass'd the Valley of Marsyas, he Encamp'd near the Streight, where the Fortres of Gerra stands, along the side of the Lake, between the Mountains. There he received notice that Nicolaus, one of Ptolomy's Captains, had laid Seige to Prolemais, where There dotus was thut up; wherefore leaving his hervy-arm'd Troops behind, and giving Orden for the Belieging the Castle of Brochos, that commanded the Passage by the Lake, he march'd at the Head of his light-arm'd Forces to raise the Seige of Proleman. Nicolaus, receiving it is wiving Intelligence of the King's approach, decamp'd from before the Town, and fent Laeras 2 Candiot, and Dorymenes an Atolian. posses the Streight near Beryens. But Anthechus hasting after them, forc'd them to a Bettel, where they were beaten; fo the King himfelf Encamp'd in the Streight. In which place affembling the whole Army, after he had encourag'd them, he prosecuted his March with the intire Body of his Troops, full of exredation of great Success, whereof there were already fo many promising appearances. Theodetus and Panætolus, accompany'd by their-Friends, coming out to meet the King, were received by him with great Courtefie, to whom they deliver'd up Tyre and Ptolemais, with all the Stores of War that were there lodg'd; among other things they found, there were forty Gallies, whereof twenty were cover'd and equipp'd for the Sea, and none were less than Quadriremes; the other were Triremes, and Vessels of less Rates; these were committed to Diognetus the King's Admiral.

In the mean time Antiochus being inform'd that Prolomy was gone to Memphis, that his Troops were affembling at Pelufium, and that they had opened the Canals of the Nile, and let loose all their Water-Courses; he thereupon chaing'd his purpose of marching to Pelusium. and divided his Army, resolv'd to attempt the Towns by the way; some by fair means, some Such Places as were not sufficientby force.

Bo

200

出品

eni th

do

10

ti

and in C A with wall

ly Garrison'd for Desence, were on his arrival frighted into Submission, and putting themselves under his Protection, Courted his favour; but such as had Men and Provisions within, and thought themselves able to with stand him, preserv'd their Obedience to their Prince; insomuch, that the King spent much time and labour to reduce them.

At to Ptolomy himfelf, who was manifeftly betray'd, he took little or no thought for the better posture of his Affairs; nor dream'd of approaching the Enemy, as he ought to have done; fuch was his stupidity, and the averfion he ever had to Military Employment: Wherefore Agathocles and Sofibius, who were at that time in prime Authority, having the intire Administration of the Publick in ther Hands, fell at length to deliberate with the best Advice they could. They resolv'd to make all possible Preparations for Defence; and to win Time, concluded to fend Overtures to Antiochus; and to proceed in fuch manner. as to possess him with assurance, that he was not at all mistaken in the Mind of Ptolomy: namely, that he would never resolve to meet him in the Field, but endeavour by Confe rence and Mediation to diffuade his Enterprize on Syria. This Counsel being approv'd, A gathocles and Sofibius, to whom a share of the Management likewise was committed, difpatch'd Ambassadors to Antiochus, and so wrought that the Rhodians, Byzantines, Cf. zicenians, rival

Faions ith her

fily

the

of

ave œ.

ts:

CTC

the cir he

ke

to

to er,

25 et

c

e

icenians, and the Ætolians themselves, difmtch'd their Ambassadors to Mediate a Peace. in fomuch, that on their arrival, the time that was taken up in Treating and Journeying from one King to another, lent space sufficient for Sofibius and Agathocles to profecute their Preparations for the War. Their Refidence was at Memphis, where they held their Conferences with the Ambassadors, according to the Emergency of Affairs; and where they receiv'd and treated with the Ministers of Antischus. But while these were well receiv'd. and civilly entertain'd, and held in hand, all the Mercenary Strangers, which Ptolomy had in his Towns and Garrisons throughout the Countries of his Dominion, were affembled at Alexandria. Furthermore, they fent every where to levy Troops, taking care above all things, that due Provision might be made as well to fustain those they had already in Pay, as those whom they expected. Nor were they less mindful of every other Point that might require their Application to advance their Purpose; sometimes the one, sometimes the other, going to Alexandria to provide that nothing might be wanting towards the Execution of what had been refolv'd. To Echecrates the Theffalian, and Phoxides the Miletian, was committed the Care of providing Arms, raising Men, and forming their Troops; who were affifted by Eurylocbus the Magnefian. together with Socrates the Bæotian, Cnopias and and Aloritas. In short, it was a mighty wantage to the Egyptians, to be furnished with those Men who had serv'd under Demetria and Antiochus, and who were at least seen in some degree in the Conduct of Battels and Military Expeditions. These then proceed to provide for the War as sast as they could exercise and Discipline the Soldiers, that were committed to their Care.

First, they caus'd them to be distributed according to their Age, then they arm'd them after fuch manner as they judg'd proper, taking from them fuch Arms as they had before been us'd to. They abolish'd the old way of drawing up in Battel, which had been observed on the review of their Armies; when they Pay'd the Soldiers, and Model'd them in fuch fort, as best fuited with the Service they wen Then they accustom'd them to to go upon. the Word of Command, wherein their Off cers kept them in perpetual Exercise; instruct. ing them likewise in the use and management of those Arms they were appointed to carry. At other times they caus'd the whole Army w be drawn up in one place, and Exercis'd toge ther; wherein Andromachus the Aspendian, and Polycrates of Argos, who were newly an riv'd out of Greece, were imploy'd above the rest. These had truly the Courage and industry of Greeks, and well knew how to ap ply it in occasions of War. Furthermore, they were Men of Experience, and both Eminent ははははいる

nem ak-ore

v'd

tey

ere

to fi

dent ry. to 10, n be n

P

nt

by

by the Reputation of their Country, and the Quality of their Persons. Polygrates was paricularly confiderable by the Antiquity of his family, and the Character of Mnahas his Father, who had often won the Prize in the Ohmpick Games. Thus then the Officers Exercifing and Animating fometimes in Publick, fometimes in Particular, the Soldiers who were respectively put under their Command, they became bold and expert for the Service wherein they were to be imploy'd.

Furthermore, ev'ry one of those we have nam'd, had their particular Posts and Charges in the Army, fuited to their Talents and Capacity. Eurylochus the Magnehan had the Command of three thousand Men, being of those Troops of the King's Houshold, call'd Agema. Socrates the Baotian, Commanded two thousand Buckler-men. Phoxidas the Achaian, and Prolomy the Son of Thrases, together with Andromachus the Aspendian, had the like Charge in the Phalanx and the Greek Mercenaries. But Andromachus and Ptolomy had the prime Commands in the Phalanx, and Phoxidas of the Mercenaries. The Phalanx was Compos'd of about five and twenty thoufand Men: The Mercenaries amounted to about eight thousand: The Horse of the King's Houshold came to about seven hundred, who were led by Polycrates, together with those who were brought from Libya; and that were mis'd in Agypt, making in all to the number of three thousand Men. But Echecrater Theffalian, had the Command of the Gracia Horse, and the rest of the Foreign Cavalry be ing to the number of two thousand in all. And as he had taken great pains in Exercifing and Disciplining them, so was his Care visibly to compens'd in the Service they afterwards per form'd to Ptolomy. Cnopias also the Aloritan vielded to none in his Diligence, in Training and Instructing those who were committed in his Charge; who were a Body of three thou fand Candiots, among whom were a thousand new-rais'd Men, which he put under the Command of Philo a Cnoffian. There were like wife three thousand Africans, Arm'd after the Macedonian manner, whose Chief was Ammo nius the Baraan. The Ægyptian Troops, or Phalanx, amounted to twenty thousand, the Command of which Body Sufibius referv'd to himself. They assembled likewise of Three cians and Gauls, Subjects of King Ptolomy's to the number of three thousand; and more two thousand new-rais'd Men of the same Nitions; these were put under the leading of Denis of Thrace. The Army of Ptolomy then was Compos'd of this number, and of the divers People we have recited.

of

Antiochus, in the mean time, laid close fiege to Dura; but that attempt not succeeding, the Place being strong of it self, and Nicolaus finding ways to recruit and supply them from time to time, he therefore accorded to

Prolomy's

W. rotal of aban Worlds and 10 5 244 ding at Winter) a Truce of tour Months; them, it would not be shrough his deale, if a Reace did not follow. Nevertheless, that he tooke not his Mind; but being untiling longer to be detain'd out of his own them to Seleucia, to their Winter-Quarters. The town of the control of

e King

世紀の日日でも同日

to

oo. nd

m to he or

he

to

.

e,

of of

n

In conclusion . Antiochus having granted he Demands of the Ambassadors, dismis'd em. with Injunctions to let him know speed to the Resolution of Ptolomy, requiring them meet him on their-return at Seleucia. Then eting Garrisons into proper places, and leav-Theadorns in the chief Command, he prepard for his return home. As foon as he ar-'d at Seleucia, he dispatch'd his Army into Winter Quarters : where during their abode. but little care was taken to train and keep them in good Discipline; he holding his Opinion, that there would be but little occasion of fighting, to finish what he find begun's for being already possess'd of a good part of the Lower Syria and Phanicia, he made no great doubt of acquiring early the reft; and it what remain'd in Dispute, would be endd by Treaty and Conference; and that Ptoloby would never be drawn to Dispute with hm him in the Field. The Ambathdon likewife of his Opinion; for Softian held the Treaty at Memphi, had omer them with all possible Descrence and Resp and had manag'd his Affairs in fuch fort, Mine of those, who had been fent to Pra were able to obtain the least information the Preparations that were making at A andria: Wherefore the Ambaffadors, at the return, declar'd that Sofibius was ready to vi every thing.

'Tis observable, that in all the Conference Antiochus had with the Amballadors of Pri lomy, he feem'd most carefully to infist on advantage of the Right he had, as well as Success of his Arms, against his Adverte And on the arrival of his Ambaffadors at leucia, when they came to treat about Conditions of the Peace, pursuant to the la structions they had received from Softh the King made but very little account of the violence that had been acted against Prolong whereof the whole World was witness, in feizing of Towns in the Laver Syria; but in quently boafted of that Expedition, affirming he had done no wrong therein to any Min having but barely attempted the recovery his Right; and that Antigonus, Coeles, an Seleucus, who were the first Conquerors that Province, were the rightful Masters, and that therein confifted the force of his Preter fions to the Lower Syria, in opposition or for Determine that it was true to was true to was a few Determines but morely as a and Ally of Selector, to whom that apportant is Then he referred to the d made by the feveral Princes; at what antigonus being defeated and vanquished, mider, Lyfmachus, and Seleucus, met in a ment Affembly, to deliberate on that Subfinded to Selement. Those who were pre-ne on the part of Ptolony, labourd to prove to contrary, and to how the weakness of the bar's Pretentions; and further to exagthe the Injury, remonstrated the Indignity breaking the Peace, by the Treachery of williers, and the Expedition of Antiochus : het Pholomy the Son of Lagar enter don the de his Arms with Selences conditionally, hat is the Domittion of Affa Should be his, Sthe Lower Syria and Phanicia should fall to William's thare. The feveral Amballidors thele and the like Realons in the Conrences that were held; but no fruit came of en Debites, through want of one common People equally interes d and partial to People equally interest one to moderate Hears that could not but grow between then, what fucuels could be hop'd? The Af-Nego-

POLYBIUS Gent Hiftory.

244

Negotiation to For Protesty; used to have comprized in the Treaty; but Astroctory not brook to much as so, her hun came claiming how; (candalous it was that Protested to much as a thought of wing protestion to openin Rebellion against Process.

This while thefe two Princes built of Equity of their Allegations, the Treaty defeated and early in the Spring Antio Membled his Troops, with intention to teck she Enemy by Sea and Land, and profequite his Conquest of what remained be reduced of Cele-Syria n Ptolony, on other part, committing his Affairs in parts to the Conduct of Nicolaus, furni Gaza plentifully with every needful thing its defence, mov'd also with his Sea and L Forces. On their arrival, Nicholaus prep with determination to shide the Want was readily supply'd in all his Demands Perirenes, to whom Ptolomy had given to Command of the Fleet and Navel Arm which confided of thirty Vessels of War, four hundred of Burthen, Nicholays wa Atolian by Nation, very brave, and in Trade of War Superiour in Knowledge to who at that time were in the Service of lomy. His first care was with part of his my to possess the Streights near Plataner, B ing himself with the other part of his Ar in the places near Porphyrean, to prevent Nege mor of Aniochus on that side of in the Artischuis errival at Marailbura, the Astapply 4 to him with Tenders of Friend hind Alliance whom he did not only livrective, but oncernosed his Mediation renthe Ulanders and the spirite Coume compoling the Difference that had oppen'd between them, and establishing Theo marching in-lyon, by that policie which is call'd Thatmuch, and burnt Trieres and Company om thence he disparen'd Theodorus and No charly with Orders to pollels the Streights sich lead to the River Lyons so he beforeand with the Enemy . In the mean time, miels kept on his march with the Army, nd come and Encomp d by the flyer Dans.

Diegratus, Wish, the Fleet beeping always near him. From thence, taking with om Nicarchus and Theodocus, with his light rand Troops, he went to view the Streights where Nicholaus was posted; and after he had ede Remarks to his Mind, he return'd back the Camp. The next Day, leaving Nicarwith the Command of his heavy arm'd Troops behind, he march'd himself at the ention what he had projected. Now, in reand Mount Libanus streightens, and contracts the

246 POLYBIUS: Gmeril History Vol

the passage by the Sca-Coast, and the space bounded by a Walley, waste and inaccess it comes to pass, that the way between and the Sea is very narrow and district Here it was where Micolans had passed before where by placing good Guards in to places, and fortifying others with Wood he thought he should be able, without mu difficulty, to withstand Marticebuck P fage.

The King, in the mean time, disposed Army into three Divisions; Thealers gave the Command of one, with Orders Mountain; another Division he gave to nedemus, who was expresly directed to rempt the Pallage that lay in the middle the Vale; the third he appointed for a refer with refrect to what might happen in Neval Conflict: These were lead by Diock who was Governour of the Country of Pare poramia near the Euphrates. Antiochus him felf making choice of fuch a place (arrend only by his Guards) where he might flas and have a fair view of all that pass'd every fide, whereby being a Spectator of the Mans behaviour, he was inabled to jud where to supply Succours in case of N And now Dieguerus and Perigenes drew the Fleets into a Line of Battel drawing as near th Shore as they could, informuch as the who Action by Land and Sea became one fine when the Signal was given they was do to the Attack on all fides. The start Sea continued for fome time doubtful, a Forces being in every thing equal. And crithflanding, Nicalaus feem'd a while to the better, having the advantage of cound; yet upon Theodotus's forcing the seasy from their Post on the Mountain, and som thence falling on the rest, Nicolaus was ampell'd to give Ground, and betake him to the About two thousand were slain in the fait, and no fewer taken Prisoners, the rest into Sidon. Perigenes likewise, who once cought he had the better in the Naval Different five priority of to behold his Friends beaten their, left the Enemy a stern, and slying, seed thimself in the same place.

Antiochus presently thereupon leads his Arny to Siden, and encamps before the Town he thought it not advisable to attack it; or as it was very well supply'd with all forts of Provisions of War, so the Inhabitants were numerous, and their Strength re-inforc'd by those who had fled thither after the Battel. from thence then he took his march towards bileteria, ordering Diognetas his Admiral to make fail with the Fleet to Tyre. Philateria ands in the neighbourhood of a great Moor, through which runs the River Jordan, which from thence purfues its courfe through the Mains of Scythopolis. Apriochus becoming Mafter of the two foremention'd Places, grew in-

into greater affarance of faccording in Enterprizes, in regard the Berritory is to those Towns product fufficient of all th to fullain his Army, and wielded over an bove enough of every thing he might need profecure his Delign; wherefore after he h threngthen'd them with good Garrisons, took his march over the Mountains, and en to Atabyrium, This Town flands on a fing Ground, which by a gentle descent minates in a Plain, from whence to the of the Eminence it is near two Miles. "H Antochus lodg'd an Ambush, which in effe won him the Place For after by little St mishes and Disputes he had drawn the People out, in one of these ingagements, seign to be too weak, his Party retreated, wh the others purfu'd; when prefently facing boot, the Enemy in their turn retir'd, who meeting the Ambush in Front, many were con off and, in short, Antiochus himself pursuing the Advantage, fo terrify'd them, that the Town was taken on the first Attack.

At the fame time Kerwas, one of Prolemy Captains, deferted, and came over to Autio chus, whom receiving with great Solemnity, it gave occasion for many other prime Officers of the King of Egypato leave his Service. For thortly after Hippolochus; the Theffalian acted the same part, bringing with him to the num ber of four hundred Horse Antiochus diko wile Garrison'd Arabyrium and pursuing his Tour-in his merch repeired apphis Ohedimies of Fella Comuse and Sophous, mrestlet debne lespo us sond ilebestle great Successio wrought on alte Minda neighbouring Paople, then they armile ly took pare with lanticebury whereby Hapes increasing and the Rower being mented by this new accession of his Head friends; he advances into Galatis, which ring he took Alila, and in it those who come in to factour it, under the leading Micias, a Rinfman and Confident of Menea's hort, Gadara was the only Place that now and to be reduced, which was effeem a most considerable for Strength in all that mutty. To this Town the King approach d h his Army, and for terrify d the Inhabiis with his preparations to Attack them. they yielded themselves up. And now bing informed that great numbers of the E nemy were drawn together in a certain Town of Arabia, call'd Rabarb ben-Ammon, or Rawamana, from whence they made Excursiand plundred the Country of those who od comracted Friendship with him the berefore laying afide all his other Affairs bent his march that way, and approach d the Monprain whereon the Town flands. After he had view'd the fituation on all fides, he devicated there were but two places by which they could be attacked; there then he posted Troops, and caus'd his Machines to approach.

の自己をある。

Prouch The Conduct of the Wo dud between Micarobus and Th himfelf kept an equal and vigilant their fletiaviour, and remarks the Afficient curry's their two Leaders to advance Service: Who emplating each other, an bouring who should first open a Breach Wall was demolified by that means focuse than was expected. That Work do the King continued his Areacks Night and I prefling by all means possible to get into Town : but therein they long labour vain, by reason of the multitude of the D dents. Till at length one of their Prile difcovered, to the Befregers, a Vaula of fage under Ground, by which the befre deleanded to supply themselves with Wa which Peffige being once flop'd up, the hibitants, fireighten'd by necessity, confe themselves vanquish'd, and so yielded up Town Caribas in Page 2

Thus Auricebus became Mafter of Raba mana, where he left Nearchus Governor, a good Garrison, and fending Hippolochus Mergas, (who had deferted Prolomy) at head of five thousand Foot into the Coun in the neighbourhood of Samaria, to Co mand in that Province, and to Defend th who had submitted to him against Incurs of the Enemy, he bent his march town Proleman, there to pass the Winter, for to had before determin'd. During the far those of Panelish being utueled the high by the Silginis, and finding them in danger, apply'd to Achius for Successivition Ambastadors; who readily protected the his Assistance, they sufficient the cash great Constancy, in hopes of his them Relies, which he accordingly disputching Garlyzrer at the Head in Thousand Foot and Five Hundred faion as the Selgians had notice of the the of these Succours, they marched with peared part of their Troops to polles the Country Climate, or the Ladders pollhis Troops on the Paffage, or Entrance by Suparda, breaking the Ground and es, marching the Paffiges every where Go hales, came and encample near Creson is; and finding it was impossible for him advance any further, for that the Enemy every where made themselves Masters of Defiles; he therefore devision this Strats-He caus'd his Troops to face about, march back by the way they came, maog thow, as if on finding the Ways to forthat he could not march on, he had paire of his Defigs of relieving the Be-d. The Selgiaer were deceived by this , and concluded durfieres had change purpole; whereupon one part of their Troops Tromps regard to their Camp and, the march'd home, for that their time by a war at hand. A sy h virgue, segreb a

This being observed by Garfferendhen upon merch'd back, and gain duffered in Mountains, without meeting any force oppose him; where posting sufficient store to grand the Avenues, he lest Rhouse to mand there, and march'd with the Arm Perga; dealing with other People of Pland with the Pamphylians themselves by sons he dispatched to them, setting sons intolent behaviour Tof the Setgialis to their Neighbours, and exhorting them to ter into the League of schools; and to co bute to the Relief of Pednetiss.

While these things were in agilition, Selgians sent an Army against Phaylor, we being well acquainted with the Country, conceived hopes of terrifying him, and force him from his Post. But finding their tempt in vain, and losing many of their tempt in vain, and losing many of their him the several Attacks they made upon they lost their hopes likewise of succession that way; howheir, they would not for their Enterprize, but had teconsists.

Machines. In the mean while the Economics who habit the Mountains of Policie that the Sida, supplyed Garfeens with a re-informent of eight thousand Men; and she dians with four thousand. But those of S ley had al just Confideration for year beating no Good-will to the would not be drawn to fend re-be fiegeth credowevet, thus ftrengthen'd with cours of the Allies, march'd towards far primiting himself to be able to been their attempt. But when with the Selgians to be under no furashlistarrival, he drew near, and Endyhis Army close by them. The Pedme the mean while were driven to great hts for every thing , wherefore Our fyerefolving to put relief into the Town by means of other, drew out two thousand Men of his own Troops, each Man with him a certain proportion of Corff, ord them to march, and endeavour to get the Town by Night But this attempt g disover'd by the Selgians, they haften'd prevent thom; and attacking them; took the Corp, and cut off most of the Party. is faces fo exalted them, that they came ercupon en resolve not only to assault the win, but to attack Garsiers himself in his up. Fon the Selgians are a Reople who in eve both those Counsels and Enterprizes thenare most rash Leaving their Camp close with a good Guard, they drew out el of their Troops, and posted them in rs places about Garfreres's Works and sh'd to the Attack on all fides. Garfyeres find-

POLYBRUS Gund Higher

finding himself inches diever forprizing Attempt, and fences in fome places after and the whole Camp reduct order'd his Horfe to fally out Enemy had taken leaft notice of the Selgians, believing the Morfe at and eferp'd away, made no more acc them, but let them pass or partial; a on, after they had gone forme diffance. wheel'd about, and fell on the Bnemy where the Dispute was bloody: "Upon the Foot, who before were heartless, in the point of turning their Bocks wood rage, and fac'd the Enemy with fresh Re tion, infomuch that the Selgians, who now thought the Day their own, beheld the felves on the fudden, furrounded on every worlted, and driven so fly. At the time the Garrison of Petheliff felly'd fell on the Selgious Camp, which they for whereupon the Enemy flying in diforder, loft to the number of at least con thou Men Those of their Allies who eleap'd tir'd home; and the Selgians gaining the of the Mountains, got to the Diry. Gaiff purfuing them, being definous to baffer of the Defilee, and approach Selgia before the my could have lessure to rally, and confult their fafety. Accordingly he came before the ty withhis Army where the Brie my hope bely from their Allies, through the los they defeat, getwine doubte attraction and tently doubte the first and the first are an affectably, show agreeds to dispatch and in great effects with statistics of an area of the first and it feets that the first ap with the tenderness of life outs the first ap with the tenderness of life outs the first ap with the tenderness of life outs the first ap with the tenderness of life outs the first and who was afterwards marry distonant.

POLYBILLOW

thefe Confidentions they concluded he propered Person to be sent in the preigence, wherefore they diffracehid him, Logiafis revealing the Secret of his Emto Garfyeres, made fo little rechening Duty, and the prefer vation of his Counthat on the contrary he was influent with feres to let Achieus underftand, that he ready to put the City into his hands; supon Garfyerer , furnish'd with the es dispatch'd Letters to Achanis praying to dispose himself for his Journey, on the held a Truce, and entered into Treaty the Selgious , and contriving Disputes the Articles of the Peace, frum our the ill the coming of stebeur, and that the had leifure to conferr with him, touching ecution of their Enterprize.

POLYBRING Hiftory

ildiera bygdogres, view admitt nynyto en flick und by Provin whee elicities wenters; can Quel-figh Hath had many bad effects sand it m effutuitable faid, that as about is no Co Relectionas Man, for there is fearer an fullect to be deceiv'd : For how many T Fortreffes, and even Camps, have been be there are frequent and fresh Examples of Differs, and we know they have be many e tis as true nevertheles, that the Ik not what kind of fatality, we know not in fecure our folves against frich Arts, an always to feek to prevent them; the rea take to be from our want of reflection of ther Men's Adventures. Our Providence feen in making Provision to fultain and our Armies, and to furnish our Soldiers the best and most propen Arms for our fence, while at the lame time we omit is both more casic and profitable; namely be on our guard against these kind of By which we lie exposide For Prudence m acquired at our leifure and by the flu History, we improve the Understanding w out difficulty, in the contemplation of the paft. Achieu bow filld non to be prefent at the sime; d and abose gian entring into Confewith him were in hopes on that occaof tharing with others the Benefin of his tienes and Humanity of But in the mean Logbafis; having privately ept into his for good number of these who came n die Companioshe Town, lebour'd with Inhabitants not to lofe the occasion, but, mirrowe, while they might, the Offers fo mifully tender'd by Achans : That they ildedo well to convoke their Attembly deliberate on their profess flate, and put eriod to the Treaty they bad already be-Wheren pon they call'd an Affembly the People, drawing off, those who were to on the Walls and ellewhere, for the den o of the Place pretending the necessity of eneral Assembly of the whole Body of People, folemaly to conclude on the Pro-

While things were in this posture in the wn, Logbahs gives the Signal to the Engand in the mean time causes the Soldiers ed received into his House, to be ready their Arms, while himself and his Sons wife prepare to act their Parts. Aebaus mapproaches the Town on one fide, with part of the Army, and Garfyeres with aber advances towards Cesbedium, which Temple of Jupiter, that commands the own in manner of a Citadel. But it chanc'd that that thefe motions were observed by a cer Shepherd, who giving an account to the fembly, that the Enemy were mippitiach the Walley forme haftned to ce shedismi, or to their Posts on the Wallspiron whence had been called y whileshe malricule mis ran to the House of Log lafe whose Tres ry being now manifelt, forme wante the Hor while others attack and force the Gates, a in thore kill'd Logbafie, with his fan ly and the whole Party what were w him. Then they proclaim'd Liberty to the Slaves; and drawing up in neveral Bodi they march detected the defence of fuch Places had most need of faccour. I And now G Speres, beholding the Temple in a pollure defence, thought it not fale to advance, w Achein, who attempted the Gares, and his utmost Endeavours to get into the Tot was attack'd by the Selgians; who make a Sally, flew about seven hundred My of his Party, and compell'd the rest to h tire.

238 POLYBIUS SHOWN After Voll

After this repulse, Achem and Garpae return'd to the Camp, while the Selgundoubting danger from a Sedicion within Town, (the Enemy being still at hand) fout some of their gravest Inhabitants to the with Achem, who at length accorded the Peace on the following Conditions: The still still conlarg'd; and that within a certain space, hould pay further three hundred Ta-Thus the Selgians, being reduc'd to misest danger of losing their Country by the Treachery of Logbans, had the good Former to rescue it by their Resolution, without hining their Liberty, or violating the Alliace in which they were engag'd with the La-

Acham, having reduc'd the Country of Milyas to his Dominion, and part of Pamplyin, march'd to Sardis, where he wag'd War with Attalw, menacing also Prustas; becoming formidable to all the Asians inhabiting on this fide Mount Taurus. But while was diverted by the War with the Selgians, detalus having with him the Gauls, Ago-Ges, or Teltofages, led his Army to the Towns of Æolia, and others in that Neighbourhood, who out of fear had submitted to Achaus The greatest part of which Towns yielded themselves up, whom he receiv'd with gentlenels, willing them to understand it in effect of his Grace and Goodness; nor were there mamy which exercis'd his Arms to reduce them. The principal Places that fubmitted were Coma, Smyrna, Phocea; and in short, the Regeans and the Lemnites terrify'd at his arfibily fubmitted. The Teil and Colophonii also apply'd to him by their Ambassadors, and put themselves and Towns under his Protedion

After

260

After he had receiv'd these People acces ding to the Conditions of the ancient League and had likewise receiv'd their Hostages, he entertain'd the Smyrnian Ambassadors with fingular Benignity; for indeed, that People ha above all others distinguish'd themselves by a generous Fidelity towards him. From themselves by a generous Fidelity towards him. From themselves by a generous Fidelity towards him. From themselves by the continu'd his march, and having pass the River Lycus, he came to the Towns inhabited by the Mysians, and so proceeded to the Country of the Carsenses, and, in short, spread so much Fear among them, that the Garrison of Didyma-Tiche, where Themissocles had been less Governour by Achaus, deliver'd up the Two Castles. From thence he march'd and spoil'd the Lands of Apia, and passing the Mountain Pelecas, he came and encampa Mountain Pelecas, he came and encampa near the River Mexistus. Here there happen ing an Eclipse of the Moon, the Gauls, who could no longer bear the Toils of to redion a March, (for they went with their Wire and Children, travelling in Waggons alone with them) conceiving the Eclipse to be minous, came to a Resolution to march on further. Whereupon, tho' they were a Per ple of no use in Attacks, and had all along during their march, encamp'd by themselves al (being subject to no Discipline) and were proud and refractory Nation: Nevertheles, the King was in pain what to refolve about I them; for he was doubtful if he should de mis them, lest they should take Arms under Acham,

4

-

拉面山

6

204

R

H

:45

di

lè

fa :C

Book V. War of the World;

schous, and that to punish their Insolence by defroying them, would redound to his difcredit, they having pass'd over into Aha out of refpect to him; wherefore he took that massion for his return, after he had promis'd m conduct them fafe to the place from whence they came, and affur'd them of Lands wherein to plant, and that he would at no time relife to comply with any of their reasonable Demands, but do them all the good Offices in his Power; fo after he had led his Gauls to the Hellespont, and treated those of Lampleas, the Alexandrians, and Illians with great Respect (they having continu'd firm in their fidelity) he return'd with his Army to Per-

d

6

4

It was now early in the Spring, when Antischus and Ptolomy, having made all neceffary Provisions for the War, were arriv'd at the conjuncture of deciding their Controverby Battel. Ptolomy march'd from Alemandria with an Army of seventy thousand Root, five thousand Horse, and seventy three Elephants; while Antiochus, receiving intelligence of the Enemies advancing, affembled elfo his Troops. His Army confisted of Dag-Carmanians, and Cilicians, who were light-arm'd; these were commanded by Bytthebus the Macedonian. Theodotus the Astolian, who had deserted and betray'd the Afhirs of Ptolomy, was plac'd at the head of twenty thousand Men, arm'd after the Mates donian manner, chosen Troops, and carrying for the most part filver'd Bucklers. The Phalanx was compos'd of about twenty those fand, which was conducted by Nicarchus and Theodotus . furnam'd Hemiolius. Mened mus the Alabandine led two thousand Arches and Slingers, with whom were mingled thousand Thracians. There were likewife Medes, Cyffians, Cadduhans, and Carama mians to the number of five thousand, when were order'd to obey Aspahanus the Media The Arabians and others of the Neighborn Nations, compos'd a Body of above ten thou fand, whose Chief was Zabdiphilus. The Greek Mercenaries amounted to five thosfand, and at the head of these was plac'd Hippolochus the Theffalian. Antiochus had fike wife five hundred Candiots, commanded by Eurylochus, and a thoutand new-rais'd Men of the same Country, whose Leader was Zele the Gortynian; there were also five hundred Lydian Shingers, and a thousand Cardacean, who had over them Lyfimachus the Gaul. The Horse consisted of about fix thousand, for thouland of which obey'd Antipater the King's Nephew; the rest were led by The mifon. In conclusion, the Army of Antiochu confisted of seventy two thousand Foot, the Horse above-noted, and a hundred and two Elephants.

RI donian

Prolomy first march'd to Petufum, where he amp'd; and as foon as the Reer was come and he had distributed Bread to the Arhe profecuted his march through a in Cafius, patting by a place call'd Baraibra. hen he arrived at Gaza, he drew out a Dene'd before the Army, without any appreame to a Place where he purpos'd to halr, acamping about fifty Furlongs from Raphia. This is the first City of the Lower Syria, after binocorura, that lies in the way from Ægypt into that Country.

Antiochus at the fame time advanc'd with s Army; and passing by Raphia, he enamp'd by Night about ren Furlongs from the memy. For a while their Camps flood at his distance one from another. But shortly her, Antiochias decamp'd, and came and lodg'd nearer the Enemy, as well to better the Conveniences of his Army's abode, as to hearten the Soldiers; fo that there was not now above five Furlong's space between their wo Camps'; infomuch that those who went to Water, and march'd out to Forrage, had frequent Rencounters; and often by Parties both Horse and Foot pickeer'd between their Camps.

day

ate l'en le hammes Ria

Here

Here Theodotus gave an inflance of And fearles Man; For having relided heretolore Pralomy's Court, and being well acquaint with the Ways and Manners of that Prince he got a little before Day-break into the En mies Camp, with two Men only in his con pany. It was not easie to know him by his Face, it being not yet Day; nor by his He bit, for that the Army confilted of great d versity of Garbs. He having before observe where the King's Tent flood, for that the had frequently pickeer'd near that place, a proach'd undiscover'd, and entring the Ten where the King us'd to Eat, and give Audience, he fearch'd every-where for him, but found him not; Ptolomy it feems having lain that Night elfewhere. Wherefore wounding only two Persons, and killing Andreas the King's Physician, he retir'd in safety, having executed his Delign, if we rightly weigh the Hazard, but fail'd only through want of in formation where the King was lodg d.

After these two Princes had remain'd sime. Days thus near each other, they agreed to come to a decision. Ptolomy first march dont, and soon after Antiochus appear'd in Battel. Their Bodies were compos'd of their Phalanxes and chosen Troops, arm'd after the Macedonian manner, who were oppos'd one to another; their Wings were thus order'd, in Ptolomy's Polycrates commanded the Left, the Hote that were under his Com-ind; and betwire there and the Phalans, i march of the Candions next to the Horie; bele, were followed by the Regiment of hards, call of Agema; after these marched is Buckler men, led by Socrates; then the abyans, arm'd like Macedonions. The Right the Horse who were under his Command; on the Left next Echeorates march'd the Gauls and Thracians; then Phoxidas with his Greek Mercenaries; after these march'd the Agypti-Phalanx. They plac'd forty Elephants to over the Lest-Wing, where the King was to e, and the other thirty three stood on the light to cover the Mercenary Horse. mebus thus order'd his Battel: On his Right he plac'd fixty Elephants, to cover the extremities of that Wing, where he himself propos'd o fland, opposid to Ptolomy, giving the Conduct to Philip his Foster-Brother; in the hear of these were posted two thousand Horse, led by Antipater; next these were the like somber drawn up in form of a Tenaile; after the Horse stood the Candiots in front; then the Greek Mercenaries; betwixt these stood the five thousand Men, that were arm'd like Macedonians, under the Command of Byttasw the Macedonian. His Left-Wing confifted of two thousand Horse, led by Themison. ter these were the Cardaces, the Lydian Sliners; and next those three thousand lightarm'd. arm d, who were under Menclemia.

with

Cyfians, Medes, and Caramanaus followed and to these succeeded the Arabs, and the Neighbour-People, which closed up to the Phalanx. The Right-point of the Battel who covered by the rest of the Elephants, which were conducted by Mysleus, who had been the

King's Page.

In this order of Battel were the two de mies drawn up; while the two Kings, attended by their Officers and Favourites, were from Rank to Rank to animare their Troop. But forafmuch as they had placed their greater Confidence in their Phalanxes, which may be call'd Legionaries; to these therefore there were more earnest in their Exhortation, wherein Sofibius and Arfinoe feconded Ptolomy; and Theodotus and Nicarchus, Antichus : who were Chiefs of the Legionaries of the one and the other Army. In fhort, may be concluded, that the Speeches of the two Princes were near the fame, whereby to encourage their Troops; neither being furnish'd with stronger Reasons than the other; for they were but young Kings, and had ne ver yet done any thing very memorable, out of which to collect Matter for their Exhortstions; wherefore they labour'd to hearten them to the Battel, by laying before them the Prize of Glory that was to be won, and the Reputation of their Ancestors; and above ill, made large Promises of Rewards to the Off cers oblige them to their best performance in a occasion. Thus then the two Kings amated their Armies, partly by themselves, partly by their Interpreters.

Horse in Floric and

As foon as Prolomy and his Sifter Arfinde ere come to the Left-Wing, and Antiochus the Right of their two Armies, attended by their Guards, they founded to the Charge, and the Battel began with their Elephants: ome of those Bealts, on Prolomy's part, came at of boldly on to the Attack, and the Men who bught from the Turrets behav'd themselves well, fighting from thence with their Pikes ; but the shock between the Elephants themselves more remarkable, those Animals attemring one the other with an imperuolity hardy to be represented; for they fight after this manner: They first make proof of their Strength by engaging with their Teeth, and with a firm foot keeping their Ground, press one against another with "their utmost Arength, till by this contention one of them prevails, and compels the other to yield ground to his superiour Strength , whereby the Trunk being turn'd affety he is forc'd, by endeavouring to difengage himfelf, to expose his Side and Flank to his Enemy, who fails tot to hit him there, goring him with his Tooth, as Bulls do with their Horns. these Animals; and encuron

268

But it came to pale that Replany's Ele phants for the most part wanted County to fland the Shock; and as the Elephants of Libya, who can neither endure the Smell nor Braying of those of ladia; so these, frighten at the Strength and Size of the others, turns their backs before they came near them, put ting Ptolomy's Regiment of Guards into dis order, who were drawn up behind them, up on whom they fell, win the interim, Aution chus leading about his Battation of Guarde and getting before the Elephants, chart Polycrates at the head of the Horfe; and a the same time the Mercenary Greeks, whi were posted near the Phalanx, advanc'd against Prolomy's Buckler-men, whose Order had been already broken by the Elephants. The Left-Wing of Prolomy's Army being by the means worsted, turn'd their backs, and be took them to flight; but Echecrates, who commanded in the Right, and stood waiting to see the issue of the Dispute between the two Points, whereof we have been speaking observing a thick Cloud of Dust drive to wards him, and perceiving their Elephanu would do nothing, commanded Phexidas who led the Greek Mercenaries, to advance, and charge those that were oppos'd to him while he led the Horfeabout, and charge those that were posted behind the Elephants, and were cover'd by those Animals: whereupon attacking the Enemies Horse in Flank and Reer, df

200 V. POLYALLISTON and to Alfany . V does

Mary they put them to flight Nor was the ide and those with him less formance, to falling on the Medicand Arab, tiad the faccess.

Thus the Right-Wing of Antiorbas beauf the Left was beaten and now, albeit the halanxes on either fide were deprive of heir Points, they remain'd however entire, Hope and Fear) the Event Antibebus, wie derv'd, where he fought on the Right, had; better; but Ecolomy retiring into the Phais, much discourag'd the Enemy; and gave Heart to his own People to profecute the herely infomuch, that Andnomachus and Son Mesuand advance The Affyrian Soldiers did ideed for a while fultain the Charge; but the who were under Nicarchus hardly enleff, and turn'd their backs, Autibebus; like ayoung Prince and unexperienc'd Captain migin'd because they had beaten the Enemy Motory had been entire; but he was foon undeceived by an old Officer, who advis'd him hedfully to confider what that mighty Cloud Duft meant, that came from the middle lattelf driving towards the Camp ; fo that being folonigiven to understand the Success. tehaltned/towards his Camp, attended only by

276 POLYBIUS of General History Volume

by his Troop of Guards; where finding Army routed, he made speed to Raphia, and det this Comfortable Persuasion only, this the Battel was not lost through any Default of his, but by the Cowardice of his Soldiers.

Peolomy, thus winning the Day through the good Behaviour of the Phalanx, many of wing, retir'd out of the Field, and remaind that Night in the Camp those that fled being cut of by the Horse that Night in the Campo The next Day, ter he had caus'd the Dead on his fide to be shown that the first of the Enemy that to he main'd on the place, he Decamp'd, Marchid directly towards Raphia. In the Marchid directly towards Raphia. In the watering, Antiochus, Rallying and Forming in the Troops fuch ashe found, who had fled out the Field, would have Encamp'd without the Walls: but finding they were for the most and the walls: Walls; but finding they were for the most pur gotten already into the Town, he thought a best to retire himself in likewise; and early the next Morning, Marching out with the Remains of his Army, took his March towards of the Caza; where after he had Encamp'd, he feet out to Ptolomy, to Demand the Bodies of those that were flain; which being obtain'd, h caus'd their Funeral Rights to be perform.

In this Defeat, Antiochus loft no less than ten thousand Foot, and above three hundred Horse, besides Prisoners to the number of the four thousand: Thirteen of his Elephane were killed in Fight, two died after of the Hurs

20

语言

AT 48

40

thousand five hundred Foot, and feven led Horse 16 of his Elimbents were killed, the remainder molt of them taken This the fucces of the Bastel star was fought Rephia, for the Dominian of Calo Syria. After Antiochies had coused the Slain to be med, he March'd away with the roll of his homeward while Proland vecew'd to Obedience, Ragbia, and the other Towns, which concended which should be first in their their to the Conqueror In short in the Ceftom of Mankind on the like occasions, accommodate their Affairs to their prefent Minds forpliable that way, as these of this Country, when Fortune will have it fo; newheles, that Nation being disposid to a the liking of the Government of the Agyp-tic Kings, it was a defs wander that they for ankly gave themselves up to Realony. And intend those of the Lober Spria, have ever boos fingular Veneration for the Royal House Wherefore, to acquire the Good Will of this Prince, they forgot no ways of therry, Honouring him with Crowns, and Attoring him with Sacrifices and Altars, and doing all things of that Nature.

When Antiobus was arriv'd at the City that bears his Name, he dispatch'd Antipater Mephew, and Theodatus Hemiolius, his Ambuffadors to Prolomy to Negotiate a Peace; Areti It

1

of

spools:

being.

272 POLYBIUS General Mistory Vol. 16

being doubtful leaft his Enemies flould state the occasion to Artack him p and having great Trull in the Multitude of his of bet by reason of his late Misferrance of Heading jeslouslikewife, "that Mobies might makedate of the Conjuncture to Guri him at As form Protony, none of chefe Reflections imployed his Thoughts, who contenting himfelf with unexpected Victory, and pleas diwich the entire Recovery of the Lower Spile, to contin ry to his Hopes, manifelted a much grains inclination to Peace, than in Prudence min ought, through the natural Sloth charowasing him, and the other Infirmities of Mindow which he was subject through the whole course of his Life. Wherefore as foon as and tipater, and the relt of that Commission mi riv'd he presently consented to a Years Three after having first faid fome menacing things and complain'd of the Injuries offer'd him by Antiochus: Then he dispatch'd Softbins to to tifle the Accord; and making about three Months Ray in Syria and Phanicia, to regul late and fettle the Affairs of the feveral Towns and Cities, he left Andromachus the Afacha dian, his Governour in those Provinces, and fo departed for Alexandria, with his Siller and Favourites; having put a period to the War, toothe great Wonder of his Subjects, who fo well knew his Lafe and Manners. In conclusion, after Antisobus had Ratify'd the Treaty of Sofibius, he prepar'd for the War against Achaus, as he had before determin'd. About

Si

uT

中平局

K

W

fa

01

fe

d

al

01

m

About the same time the Rhodians, wisely improv'd the occasion of an Earthquake, that appen'd in that Island, which had Demolish'd their Coloffus, their Ars'nal, and the greatest part of their Walls. But this Calamity, by their Wildom, was Converted to a Benefit : So wide the difference is between the effects of thoughtless Negligence, and prudent Vigilance, whether it be in private or publick Affairs: For as the one often turns the best Success into a Calamity; so the other can extract Benefit out of the greatest Disasters. Thus the Rhodians aggravating their Sufferings and Losses to the World, by Ambassadours which they fent abroad for that purpofe; that what by Treating in Publick, what by Private Persuasion, People (especially the Kings) were fo much touch'd, and took fo ensible a part in their Affliction, that they were not only reliev'd and fupply'd, but were Treated with fuch Respect, that their Benefactors reckon'd themselves oblig'd by their own Generofity. Hiero and Gelo gave them leventy five Talents to rebuild the place of their Exercises; part of which Sum was pay'd down, the rest soon after. These presented them likewise with Silver Candlesticks, and other Vessels for Sacred Uses, with ten Talents for their Sacrifices, and other ten for the Supply of the like Necessities; the whole Sum amounting to an hundred Talents. Furthermore, all who Navigated and Traded to Rhodes.

place of Rhodes, where the People of that City were Crown'd by those of Syracuse.

King Rolomy likewise promis'd them three hundred Talents of Silver, a million of Armbes, or Measures of Wheat; Materials for building of twenty Quinqueremes, and the like number of Triremes; as namely, forty thousand Cubits of Pine-Timber, a thoufand pounds weight of Copper Money, three thousand pounds weight of Tow, three thou fand Masts, three thousand Talents to re-edifie their Coloffus; an hundred Architects, three hundred and fifty Artificers, and fourteen Talents by the Year, to pay for their fustenance. Furthermore, he gave them ten thousand Artabes of Corn, for the expence of their Sacrifices and Exercises; and twenty thousand of the like Measures of Corn, for the Service of their Fleet. In short, the greatest part of thek particulars were foon deliver'd, and a third part of the Money in Hand.

Antigonus gave them ten thousand pieces of Timber, of fixteen Cubits long each piece; seven thousand Planks, of seven Cubits long

each;

oc ha

10

of 西山山山山 et-

rec

ti-

for

he

ty

10-

1 ee 2-

Q.

it of of

£

rd

of

ach; three thousand pounds of Iron, three bouland pounds of Pitch and Rolin, and a bouland Metreta'sor Measures of Tar; further. romifing them a hundred Talents of Silver. Cryfeis, his Wife, gave them an hundred houland Measures of Wheat, and three thouand pounds weight of Lead. Seleucus, Father of Antiochus, gave immunity to all the Modians, who Navigated on the Coast of his Dominions, ten Gallies equipp'd for War, and wo hundred thousand Measures of Corn. bedes many other things of value.

Prufias, Mitbridates, and the rest of the Princes then Reigning in Afia; as Lylanias, Olympichus, and Limnæus, made them proportionable Presents. In a word, 'tis impossible to recount the numbers of Towns, and People, who contributed to the Relief of the Abodians, according to their Ability in that occasion. Infomuch, that whoever should hive consider'd only, how suddenly that City role from its Ruines, to that wonderful height of Riches and Splendor, both in Publick and Private, would be struck with astonishment. But when confideration is had to its Commodity of Situation, and the superfluity of all things that were supply'd them from abroad, that they might be fure to want for nothing; their flourishing State, and the Felicity to which they fo fcon arriv'd, will then ceafe to surprize us, and rather defeat our Expectations.

We

276 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. I

We have a little enlarg'd on this Subject, in exemplifie the Rhodians Love to their Commonwealth, who have shewn themselves wo thy of Praise from all Men, and are an excellent Example for imitation. And this we have taken the liberty the rather to fay, to the end the both Princes and People may confider and & how the Minds of Men are shrunk, and how little the Liberalities of our Days appear, when compar'd with the Munificence of our Foresthers; and to the end that when they have extended a small Favour, they may not exalt their own Generosity, and for little Acts of Grace, exact Remunerations and Honour, equal to what was due to Kings of Old; and that by weighing rightly eithers Merit, neither may want his due.

About the beginning of Summer, Agetas being Prætor of the Ætolians, and the Elder Aratus Elected to that Magistracy by the Achaians, being now enter'd on his Charge, (I think at least, 'twas there we brake off our Discourse of the Social War) Lycurgus the Spartan returning home from Ætolia, being recall'd by the Ephori, who had found the Information salse on which the Sentence of his Banishment was grounded, (he I say) in consigunction with Pyrrhias the Ætolian, who was at that time the Elean Prætor, resolv'd to sall on the Lands of the Messenians. Aratus, in the mean time, found the Achaian Mercenaries corrupted by Idleness, and decay of

Discipline

and

ani tha

all

Buc

gia fur

Fle

W2

thr

the 100

in

tot

ch

はるにのはなるののようは

of the

45

Discipline, and the Cities indispos'd to contrihite towards the War, through the default of Deratus, who had but ill discharg'd his Office Prætor. Wherefore after fit Exhortations the Achaians, and wresting from them by orce, as it were, a Decree for his purpose, Papply'd himself with his best diligence to repare to profecute the War. The Achaians Decreed to entertain eight thousand Mercenary Stranger Foot, and five hundred Horse : and that they should levy at home three thouand Foot, and three hundred Horse; and that to compleat that number, the Megalo-Mitans should contribute three hundred Foot, all'd Chalcaspides, from their bearing Brass-Bucklers, and fifty Horse; and that the Artions should furnish the like number. It was further Decreed, that they should fit out a fleet, and that three Ships should be sent towards Ata, and the Gulph of Argos; and three to hover about Patra and Dymas, and the Seas in the Neighbourhood.

While Aratus was busy'd in these Affairs, and making Provision for the War, Lycurzus and Pyrrhias led their Troops into the Territory of Messenia, having concerted by their Agents about the time they were to move with their Armies into the Field. But Aratus getting notice of their purpose, took with him the Mercenaries, to whom he joyn'd some chosen Troops, and with these March'd away in haste to succour the Messenians, and to proceed

POLYBIUS's General History Vol. 1

proceed to Megalopolis. In the interim, L. curgus takes Calamas, a Melenian Town, by Jun Intelligence; from whence he profecuted he March to joyn the Atolians. But Pyrrhia. having drawn but a small Force out of Elec was Encounter'd by the Messenians on their Frontiers, and worsted, and so compell'd to Petire home again. Whereupon Lycargus, de feated in his Hopes of increasing his strength by that addition, and not having Force full ficient of his own to put his Delign in effect after he had Forag' d the Enemy's Countrey. and done them what damage he was able, with the little strength he had, return'd back to Sparta, having done nothing worth men tion.

The Enemy thus disappointed, Aratus who was provident to foresee the future, prevail'd with Taurion to order out fifty Horse, and five hundred Foot, enjoying the Messenians to provide the like number; with which Force, he propos'd to defend the Frontiers of the Mel-Sensans, Megalopolitans, Tegaans, and Argians; For that these Countries, lying in the Neighbourhood of Laconia, whenever the Lacede monians wage War in Peloponnesus, stand expos'd to the first shock of the Enemy. As to the Landsof Achaia, that lie towards Elea and Ætolia, those he resolv'd to desend with his Mercenaries, joyning with them some Achaian

Troops.

Dec

ioni

Wer

Put

fill

Bot

att)

Sta

Pot

wb

aro

To lim

COL

1 ftil

ter

lol

th

in

Fu

w

00

W

10

in

2, 7, 10

'n

ũ.

Aratus, having put his Affairs in this pofure, difmis'd the Megalopolitans home, by a Decree of the Achaians; for that having not ling before been forc'd to leave their Country murely ruin'd by Cleomenes; and albeit they were poor, and in no condition to do any thing. Publick or Private, nevertheless they posses'd fiff the fame Courage and Greatness of Mind. but this begat great Diforders and Diffentions among them, as it feldom fails to happen in States or Private Families, when pinch'd with Poverty, and depriv'd of means to Profecute that they would design. First, a Contention rose about the Structure of the Walls of their Town: fome were for confining it to streighter limits, and fo to build, that when they should come to erect the Walls, they might compass it without difficulty, and that in case of Hofility they might the better defend it. These remonstrating that their Town had not been of, nor they undone by the Enemy, but through the over-great circuit of their Walls, and their want of numbers to Man them. furthermore, they propos'd that the Rich, who had Possessions and Inheritances, should contribute the third part of their Estates towards the re-peopling the Town. Others were of a different Opinion, neither yielding to build the Town less than it was, nor thinking it reasonable that the rich should so contribute. But the Dispute was heightned on occasion of the Laws of Pritanis, a Person of great great Fame, who had been bred among the Peripateticks, and was fent by Antigonus to be their Legislator. But Aratus at length compos'd these Differences, and bringing them to Reason by all the Arts he could, intirely reconcil'd them; and had the Articles of Accord ingraven and plac'd on a Column near the Altar of Vesta.

280 POLYBIUS's General History Vol. II

Boo

Flee

that

mi

tem

To

nev

11

of :

die

tha

by

Su

vifi

pro

tar fro

CO

80

th

Sobj

1

H

T

C

k

ù

V

As foon as Aratus had united the Megalope litans, he departed to go to the Assembly of the Achaians, leaving the Mercenaries to the lead ing of Lyons the Pharean, who was at that time Pro-Prætor of the Country. The Eleans, who were not pleas'd with Pyrrhias, procur'd to have his Place fill'd by Euripidas, who came to them from Atolia; he taking the occasion of the Assembly of the Achaians, drew out two thousand Foot and threescore Horse, and led them into the Territory of Pharas, plundring and spoiling all along as he march'd as far as the Frontiers of the Ægeans, and having got much Booty, retir'd to Leontium. Lycus receiving Intelligence of what had pass'd, march'd out and got before him, with defign to make him quit his Plunder; and Attacking him, kill'd above four hundred of his Party, and took two hundred Prisoners; among whom were Physhas, Antanor, Clearchus, Euanoridas, Aristogiton, Nicasippus, and Aspasius, all Men of note; taking over and above, their Arms and Baggage. At the same time the General of the Achaian Flcet, b h

1-ts n

10 1

ı

i,

0

Ĉ

e,

d

d

d

đ

e

.

×

Fleet, failing to Melycria, took there no less than an hundred Prisoners; and after his remrn. he transported a Body of Troops to attempt Chalcea, the Inhabitants of which Town immediately Sallying out against him; nevertheless, he took two of their Ships with all their Mer aboard; he made Prize likewise of a Brigandine near Rhium, with ail the Soldiers and Rowers that were in her. And in that Expedition he took much Plunder both by Sea and Land, which produc'd a great Summ of Money, and so great plenty of Provision, that the Soldiers took better heart, in prospect of better Pay; and the People affutence to think, they should be now exempt from Taxes and Contributions towards the War. And now it came to pals that Scerdilaidas, conceiving himself abus'd by King Philip, a good part of the Money that was due by the Stipulations that were concluded between them, being with held from him, fitted out a Squadron of fifteen Ships, with orders to take by reprifal, what by agreement was his due. This Squadron came to the Port of Leucas. where on account of old Friendship they were well receiv'd; and here indeed they acted no Hostility, having no occasion given them. They took only Agathymus and Cassander of Corinth, who arriv'd at the Port in Vessels belonging to Taurion, and as Friends adventur'd into the Harbour; but these seizing the four Vessels, and making them Prisoners, sent them away to Scerdilaidos, Ships and all. From the thence they made fail for Malea, plunding a punding with the state of the st 日本日 of 1 with A

TO wit

> Aca der.

> uy

diffr

Up

MO 10

Pa

to bec

the 10

801 be Pr

1

way.

And now Harvest approaching, and Tours on taking no thought for supplying that Towns we mention'd with Succours, Aratus therefore with a chosen Band of Soldier march'd to affift the Argians in their Harvell; and Euripidas drew out his Atolians to Fo rage the Lands of Tritea. But Lycus and Demodochus, Generals of the Achaian Horfe coming to understand that the Ætolians were march'd out of Elea, immediately gather'd Body of Troops out of Dymas, Patra, and Pharda, whom joyning with the Mercenaries they had with them, they march'd and fell on the Lands of the Eleans; and drawing near to a Place call'd Phyxium, they ordere their Horse and light-arm'd Troops to Forage the Country, concealing the rest of their Forces in the foremention'd place; whereup on the Eleans marched all out against those that spoil'd the Country, and pursued them who feem'd to fly. Lycus in the mean time rifes from his Ambush and attacks them, whom not able to withstand, but facing about at the first fight of them, the Achaians cut off to the number of two hundred, took about fourfcore Prisoners, and so march'd home in fafety with all their Booty. He who commanded the Achaian Fleet likewise, making several descents on 7

ne W

n 1;

G.

le, re

8 1

Ė

on the Coast of Calydon and Naupacius, pillagid at pleasure all along the Country, and at routed in ame to the relief: In one of which he took Cleanicus of Naupactus Prifoner, who was foon mlarg'd without Ranfom, as being a favourer of the Achaians, wherefore he was not fold with the rest on his being taken.

At the same time, Agetas the Ætolian Praor rais'd an Army out of his own Nation. with which marching into the Lands of the Acarnanians, after he had taken much Plunder, he made Inroads and Forag'd the Counby of Epirus, and then return'd home, and dimised the Atolians to their several Towns. Upon this the Acarnanians invaded the Termory of Stratus, where being surprized with causless Terror, they retreated back with hime, howbeit without loss; the Country-People who made head against them, fearing to pursue them, jealous that their flight had been only to draw them into an Ambush. the same time a piece of mock-Treason was ded in Phanotis, which was manag'd after his manner; Alexander, whom Philip had plac'd his Governour in Phocis, contriv'd with lafon, whom he had made Governor of Phaintis, this stratagem to catch the Ætolians; he made Jason treat with Agetas, the Ætolian Prater, about the betraying to him the Ciadel of that Place, which by Oath he conmid; whereupon Agetas coming with his Æto-froi Day

100 ve

pro

rat

kn

the

ftr wi

mi

pr

20

of

œ

th ot co

th

Ætolians thither, and at the time concernd between them, chose out an hundred of the best Men of his Party, and fent them towards the Fort, while himself with the rest remain'd conceal'd not far off. Jajon, who had Mex. ander himself in the Town ready to fally to his affistance, admitted (pursuant to the greement) the Ætolians into the Citadel: whereupon Alexander immediately entring furpriz'd and took them. Aget as coming to understand by Morning what had happen'd, march'd back with his Army; having been catch'd in the same Snare by which he had of ten taken others, being fingular in those kinds of dishonest Arts.

During these Transactions in Greece, King Philip took the Town of Bylazor in Paonia which place commanded fo intirely the way by which we go from Dardania into Macedon, that becoming Master thereof, he became thereby fafe against all Attempts of the Dardanians; it being very difficult to invade Me cedon, after Philip had got this Place into his possession, which gave him all the Inlets to that Country. As foon as he had strengthen'd it with a good Garrison, he dispatch'd Chrysgenus with expedition, to conduct a Body of new-rais'd Troops out of the Upper Macedon; going himself to Edesa with those he had rais'd in Bottia and Amphaxitis. And as food as Chryfogonus return'd with his Macedonians, he march'd and came in fix Days to Lariffa; from

ing it, inc is to die of

d

from whence continuing his march Night and Day, with repofing as little as possible by the way, he came before Melitea, which place attempted to take by Scalade; while those within were fo terrify'd at an Attack fo furrifing, that he had master'd the Town with ttle difficulty, had not their Ladders been too fhort. In which Matter their Officers were greatly to blame; for what is more reproachable, than to come rashly to the Affult of a Town or Fortress, without prepamion of every necessary thing? As a right knowledge of the height of the Walls, and the like proper Information, whereby to frengthen their affurance of Success. Who will not therefore condemn these of Negligence and want of Fore-fight? Or, having themselves taken wrong measures, and committed it to others to pursue their mistakes in providing Ladders and other Machines, which are contriv'd and prepar'd without difficulty. and are of indispensible use in such Interprizes; who, I fay, can excuse them of being Authors of their own Shame and Reproach, who conceive such Orders? And what is more certain. than to fee in these occasions every omission of our Duty punish'd? For the Error is no sooner committed when we see the Damage, and feel the Effects, which appear in divers manners. First, the bravest and most forward. Men are hereby most expos'd, who being by this means compell'd to retire, the Enemy recovers heart and attacks them with affurance and purfues them with advantage. This confirm'd by infinite Examples; for of those who are forc'd to retire in fuch occasions, we shall find more to perish, and be reduc'd to the utmost perils than to escape. And it mul be confess'd, that such as act thus weakly contract to themselves the misfortune of no ver being afterwards trusted; incur a lasting hatred among the Soldiers, and teach the ! nemy to be more on his guard. And fuch Errors do not only admonish the Spectator how to improve them, but afford instruction to those who hear the relation. Wherefore all Officers and Leaders, who shall be ingaged in the Conduct of the like Enterprizes, be hereby taught to proceed more regardfully. Nor is it difficult, by the help of a very little Science, to be Master of the means, whereby to compass exactly such heights and measures. as import us to know with affurance, when we have such designs to prosecute. But let us resume our Discourse, referring to another place what we purpose to deliver for the instruction of those who would not be deceived when they engage in Actions of this nature.

286 POLYBIUS's General History Vol.11

gre fals

100

the 100

Sto

16 fio To Gr

pia

lox

an for

King Philip, hopeless of succeeding in his purpose here, drew off and encamp'd his Army along the River Enipeus; ordering to be brought from Larissa, and the other Towns, all such Stores and Provisions of War, as during the Winter he had caus'd to be provided for

is r-

10

the fervice of Sieges and attacking of Towns: his main defign in the Expedition being to attempt the City of Thebes, call'd Phibiotis. This place is situate near the Sea, affant about eight and thirty Miles from Larifa. Tis a Frontier of Maguefia and Theffaly. The Territory borders on Magnefia on the de towards Demetrias; on Thessaly, towards that quarter that is inhabited by the Pharfaliand Pherwans. But forasmuch as the Etelians were now Masters of that Country. and from thence made incessant Inroads, they meatly annoy'd those of Demetrius, the Pharfalian and Lariffeans, spoiling and plundering as far as a place call'd the Fields of Amy-news. Wherefore Philip, concluding the Enterprize to be worth his while, resolv'd to spare mapplication whereby to become Master of that place. In order to which, he had provided m hundred and fifty extraordinary Catapults, and five and twenty other Engines for casting of Stones, and fo march'd and fat down before Thebes; and forming his Army into three Divifions, took possession of the nearest Posts to the Town; one Division being posted on the Ground near Scopius, another about Helietropin, and the third possess'd an Eminence that looks into the Town. These three Camps he united by Lines of Communication, which he fortify'd with wooden Redoubts, standing at about an hundred Paces distant one from another, wherein he plac'd good Guards for their dedefence. Then fecuring all his Stores and E. quipage of War in one place, he caus'd in Machines to be drawn out.

tiu

des

00

of

fole

1

to

En

to

R

200

25 lin the

ref

to

of

th

En

th

in

ing

gr

fu

ve

0

th

During the first three Days, the Inhabitant shew'd great assurance by the brave resistance they made, whereby the Works advanc'd but little; but after by incessint Attacks, which kept them continually in action, and a migh ty number of Darts and Stones that had been cast into the Town, whereby the better hell of the Besieged were either kill'd or wounded their Resolution began to fail, and the Mardonians with more fuccess, advanc'd with their Howbeit, tho' they wrought with their utmost diligence, they were five Days gaining the foot of the Wall, the Ground proving fo difficult. But in the end, by work ing without intermission Night and Day, to lieving each other by Parties, they had fapp'd about two hundred paces of the Wall, which they sustain'd by strong Posts or Props of Timber. But it so happen'd, that these Props being not of sufficient strength to sustain the Burthen, the Wall fell, before the Macedoni ans could apply fire to confume them, as we their Custom. Then they wrought a Mine under the Ruines, to make a passage into the Town; but as foon as the Thebans perceive the Enemy preparing to force their entrance, they yielded. Philip by this success having fecur'd the Frontiers of Theffaly and Magnefia, and taken much Booty from the Ætolian, his

五山

led as it ays it is port of ops the way as the ce,

4,

his Army came then to confess, That Leontim had justly suffer'd; for it was now evident. That he had not done his Duty as he ought, with the strength he had at the Siege of Palæa.

Philip thus becoming Master of Thebes. fold the Inhabitants, and re-peopling it with Colony of Macedonians, chang'd its Name to Philippi. Thus having succeeded in all his Interprizes, new Ambassadors came to him to treat about a Peace, on the part of the Rhodians; also from Chios, the Byzantines, and from Ptolomy himself. But Philip reply'd, is he had done before, That he held the same disposition to give a period to the War, willing them to apply to the Atolians, to know their purpose; but that in the interim he was resolv'd to pursue his Enterprizes. In order to which, receiving intelligence that the Ships of Scerdilaidas intested the Sea about Malea; that they treated all the Trading-Vessels as Enemies; and that contrary to the Treaty, they had feiz'd fome of his own Subjects Ships in the Port of Leucas. He therefore Embarking on the Euripus with a Fleet of fifty Sail great and small; some equipp'd for War, others Vessels of Burthen; with this force purh'd with great diligence the Illyrians, persevering in his purpole to press the War against the Atolians, being yet totally ignorant of Occurrences in Italy: For about the time that Philip held Thebes belieg'd, the Romans were fire

PET Rig

VOL

PIL

wh

For

WES

not rie

que

the

be 600

deli

to

POS had

it li

Tre

ten

to a

the fou

ans.

had hin

Wit

bet

were beaten in Tuscany by Hannibal, the news whereof had not yet reach'd Greece. Philis coming too late to attack the Illyrian Fleen fail'd to Cenchrea, from whence he fent his Vessels of War to cruize on the Coast of Me lea, towards Ægium and Patræ, ordering his other Ships to steer towards Lechaum by the Cape of Peloponnesus, with instructions there to remain at Anchor, while he himself, accompany'd with his Friends and Favourites. made hafte to Argos, to be present at the Nemæan Games; at which time he receiv'd Letters from Macedon, imparting the news of the Romans Defeat in a great Battel, and that Hannibal was Master of all without their Retrenchments. This news Philip communicates to Demetrius of Pharus, and to no o ther, to whom he enjoyn'd all possible secrecy. Demetrius glad of the occasion, advis'd him thereupon to give a period to the Æth lian War, with what expedition he could; but his Opinion was, That he should profecute his Defign against the Illyrians, and prepare his Thoughts for an Expedition into He persuaded him, that such a Defign would win him the Obedience of the whole Greek Nation for the time to come, that the Achaians would submit through the Affection they bare him, and the Ætolians through fear, after the many Calamities they fuffer'd by the War: That Italy, and his Voy- adv age thither, would be his first step to the uni- for verfal verfal Dominion, to which none had so great Right to pretend; and that the present Difresses of the Romans was a sair and most savourable occasion to incite him to the Enter-

Prize.

lip

et, Hs

6-

is

he

Te

0

CS,

le-

1 he

at ir '

D-

0-6ď

.

1:

e.

9

to 6.

10

e, je i

WS y

70.

al

Thus did Demetrius eafily work on Philip, who was yet but young, and whose Affairs fortune had hitherto espous'd; whose Mind was great, and he of a Race, that I, by I know not what kind of Destiny, above all others, yielded with ease to the transportments of acquiring the Universal Dominion. the present, I say, communicated the news he had received to none but Demetrius: But fon after affembling his Friends, he fell to deliberate about a Peace with the Ætolians; to which Aratus appear'd well enough difpos'd; weighing, that by how much they had the better in the War, by so much was it likely they should better their Terms in a Treaty of Peace. Wherefore, without attending the arrival of Ambassadors, who were to act in that Negotiation, he dispatch'd to the Ætolians Cleonicus of Naupactus, whom he found attending the Assembly of the Achaians, and where he had remain d ever fince he had been taken Prisoner. Then taking with him what Ships he found at Corinth, he went with his Land-Forces to Ægium: But the better to hide his Inclinations to a Peace, he advanc'd towards Lasion; and taking a small fortress that was built on the Ruines of that

POLYBIUS's General History Vol. 11

OVE

the

Aff

ter

mo

his

tha

Car

Wil

the

wh

in

At

bo

th

Pe

ter

Bo

In

lia

Pa

th

de

ba

th

200

th

Place, made shew of a purpose to seize or Elea. After Cleonicus had made two or three Tournies backward and forward, the Ætels ans demanded a Conference, to which Philip consented. And having now his Mind ton. ly wean'd from the War, he dispatch'd Let. ters to the respective Cities of the Confede racy, exhorting them to hasten their Depaties to the Assembly, to deliberate together about Peace. In the interim, he imbark'd his Army for Panormus, a Port-Town of Pa loponnesus, lying against Naupactus, where he Encamp'd, resolving to attend the Amval of the Ambassadors, who were to compose the Assembly. But he went himself to Zacynthus, where he stay'd till he had notice of their meeting, and then return'd, after he had first by his single Authority settled the Affairs of that Island.

As foon as the Affembly was full, King Philip dispatch'd Aratus, Taurion, and certain others who had accompany'd them to the Ætolians, who at the same time held a General Assembly of their States at Naupalin, en whither the Ambassadors likewise came; and after fome Conference, whereby they be came affur'd of the Ætolians being fincerely dispos'd to a Peace, they return'd to impart the News to Philip. But the Atolians being in good earnest to put a period to that d War, accompany'd them with their own Ambassadors, to persuade the King to come over

. IL

00

iree

oli

ilip

ta-

Let-

peher

k'd

Pe-

icie

m

to to

tice

he

the

ing

er-

1 1

us,

and

be-

ely

mans -

hat

wn

me

ver

over with his Army into Atolia, to the end they might by conference give an iffue to the Affair, which would be expedited with greaper ease, when he should be so near. mov'd by their Intreaties, pass'd over with his Troops, and came to a place within less than a League of Naupactus, where he Encamp'd; and fecuring his Army and Fleet with a good Retrenchment there, attended the refult of their Debates. In the mean while, the Ætolians came flocking to them in Multitudes, confidently and without Arms. And because the place of Treaty was not ahove a quarter of a Mile from Philip's Camp, they held continual intercourse with him; by Persons impower'd by them to treat; and after a while, the King fent to them the whole Body of the Confederate Ambassadors, with Instructions to to yield a Peace with the Ætolians, on condition principally, that each Party should be confirm'd in the possession of the Places then held. After the Ætolians had declar'd their Confent to the Proposition, they enter'd into Debates touching the Articles that had regard to each one in particular: But of that we shall make no mention, as containing little of Importance, and shall only recite the Terms of a Remonstrance, made by Agelans of Naupactus, to the King and the Confederates, on their opening the Assembly.

He told them, that nothing fo much imported the Greeks, as to shun all occasions of 0

G

A

fo

gi

OT

in ju

at hi

h

War among themselves; and that they ought to render Thanks to the Gods, that become ing now of one Mind, and leading each other as it were by the hand, like those who fords River, they have obtain'd a prospect of uniting in the general Defence of themselves and their Cities against the Barbarians, whose Designs they had so much cause to apprehend That albeit they should not be able to give perpetuity to the present Union among the Greeks, it behov'd them at least in that Conjuncture, to agree as one Man in the prefervation of their Common Safety; fince none could be ignorant of the strength of the Barbarians, and the mighty War they were like to have on their hands with that People That none, how unacquainted foever in the Affairs of the Commonwealth, but must dis cern, that nothing was more probable, than that whether the Ganthaginians vanquish'd the Romans, or the Romans the Carthaginians, in the present War, the Conquerors would not rest satisfy'd with the Dominion of Italy, a Sicily, but profecute their Defigns further than they would be willing; and at length as far s Greece it felf: Wherefore he exhorted them, especially King Philip, to have an eye to the Danger that threatned them; that the Tas would not be insuperable, if instead of impairing the Forces of the Greeks, as he had hitherto done; and rendring them by that means an easier Prey to their Enemies; h would

.11.

ght

·mo ther

rd a

uni-

and

hose

end.

give

the

on-

fer-

one

Bar

like

ple

the

dif

han

the

, in

not

, or

han

r 25

em, the

that he would now lay their Affairs to heart, and do for them as for himself, and act in behalf of the whole Greek Nation, as if Greece were his Inheritance. That if he fo conducted his Councils, he should have no cause to doubt of equiring the general Affection of that People : of being by them abetted, and affifted, in all his Deligns; and that Foreigners, terrify'd at the Firmness of their Fidelity to him, would be cautious how they invaded him. his Mind was bent on great Enterprizes, and he thirsted after Glory, he should extend his Prospect towards the West, and contemplate the War that had fet all Italy in a flame; that he should watch the Event, and improve it to his advantage; and when Time should ripen his Affairs, generously aspire to the Dominion of the World. That the present Conjuncture did not impugn that Design. In conclusion, he pray'd him, that if it were fo that he had any remains of Displeasure against any of the Greeks, which might dispose him to new Hostilities, he would respite his Purpose to a Seafon of more leifure, and so provide that it might be always in his Power to renew, and give a period to the War with them. once he suffer'd the Tempest that was gathering in the West to reach Greece, it might justly be fear'd, that all these Treaties, Leagues, and Wars, which, as it were in pastime, had hitherto entertain'd them, would be then fo little in their choice, that they might come T 4 one

to 由品 ih

b

t

E

ME HO

ti

3

N

9

P

A. ...

...

one day to ascribe it to the great Favour of the Gods, to be able to determine among themselves of Peace and War; and to have a equally in their power, as their Wish, to be

Judges of their own Differences.

This Speech of Agelaus prevail'd with the Confederates, especially King Philip, to de fire the Peace more earnestly. For he, who was already shaken by the Counsels of Demetrius, heard nothing from Agelaus that did not fort to his purpole. Wherefore after he had adjusted the Conditions with the Ætolians, and fign'd the Treaty, every one return'd home, carrying with them Peace in exchange These things came to pass, name for War. ly, the Defeat of the Romans in Tuscany, the War of Antiochus for the Lower Syria, and the Peace of King Philip, and the Achaians, with the Ætolians, in the third Year of the Hundred and fortieth Olympiad; about which time it was, that the Affairs of Italy and A. frick began to mix and have relation with those of Greece. For afterthis neither K. Philip nor any of the Greek Princes, form'd any Defign, or amus'd themselves about Peace or War in Greece; but all had their Eyes fix'd on Italy, as the Object of every one's Attention. And it was not long before the feveral People inhabiting the Isles of Afia, acted the same part; for those who cou'd not brook the growing Greatness of Philip, and others who had any Contests with Attalus, had no more recourse to

en

be

the de

vho

medid

he

oli

n'd

nge

nethe

ind

the

ich

A.

ith

lip

De-Var

ily,

ha-

rt;

ng

ny

rfe

to

less

to Antiochus or Ptolomy, to Southern or Eafern Princes, but had their Prospect Westwards; fome fending their Ambassadors to the Carthaginians, others to the Romans. like fort, the Romans themselves, awak ned by the Power and Prowess of King Philip, and being willing to obviate betimes the Danger that might grow from that Prince's Enmity. who might add new Evils to those which alreadylforely pres'd them on all fides; refolv'd to dispatch Ambassadors into Greece. forafmuch as we have already clearly explain'd, at what time, by what means, and what Counsels the Affairs of Greece came to be interwoven with those of Italy and Africk; after we shall have continued to relate the Transaaions of Greece, to the time when the Romans were defeated at Cannæ, where we brake off our Discourse of the Occurrences of Italy, we purpose to finish this Book.

As foon as the Peace was ratify'd, and the Achaians had created Timoxenus their Prætor, they'return'd to their old Manners and course of Life; and the rest of the Towns of Peloponnessus, in like sort, sell to repair their publick and private Damages, to cultivate their Ground, re-edifie their Altars, establish their Worship, and restore their Laws and Customs. All which had been near utterly ruin'd and made desolate through the long War they had sustain'd: It having been the sate of the Peloponnessus, (who of all others are most dispos'd to a Life of Ease and Tranquility) to enjoy

Bo

mo

Foi

pe

at :

fre

fuf

fit

Re

m

Sp

th

W

th

pl

21 k

t

6

i

0

1

less of that Blessing than their Neighbours, and of whom it may be said with Euripides, Whose Life with War and endless Toil, a vex'd.

Nor is it more than what in my Judgment feems reasonable to expect should befal them: for what is more probable, than that a People aspiring after Dominion, jealous of their Liber ty, and who would yield Precedence to none. should be ever embroil'd in Hostilities. would have thought that the Athenians, after they were deliver'd from their Fears of the Macedonians, should have been at ease, and establish'd their Security on fure and lasting Foundations; yet so it happen'd, that giving themselves up to the Counsels and Conduct of Euryclidas and Micyon, and feeluding themfelves from the Society of the other Cities of Greece; what Flanteries, what Decrees of Honours and Praise (led by the Weakness of their Governours) did they heap on the Neighbouring Kings, especially Ptolomy, without regard to Decency or their own Honour, through the Folly of those who administred their Affairs! Ptolomy had no fooner compos'd his Affairs in Syria, when he became oblig'd to wage a new War in his own Dominions. For after that Prince had put the Egyptiam in Arms against Antiochus, wherein he was not ill-advised, if regard only were to be had to the occasion that then press'd him; the fequel shew'd, that nothing could have been more 11.

r$:

,

ent

n:

er.

ne,

ne

16

he

nd

ng

ng

of

n-

of

of

of

hut

IF,

ed

ď

ď

15.

MS

35

'n

more pernicious with respect to the future. for the Egyptians growing proud and overweaning of their Strength, after the Victory at Raphia, grew to withdraw their Obedience from the King; and conceiving their Power fufficient to withstand him, waited only for a fe Person to head them, to proceed to a Rebellion; and in short, did rebell foon after.

Antiochus, who, during Winter, had made mighty Provision for the War, early in the Spring pas'd over Mount Taurus; and enming into League with Attalus, profecuted the War against Acheus. The Ætolians, to whom the War had not prov'd fo fortunate as they had hop'd, were for a while well enough pleas'd with Peace; and, on that Confideration, they chose Azelaus of Naupactus Prætor, whom they believ'd to have been mainly instrumental in the Pacification between them and the Achaians; nevertheless, it was not long before that Peace distasted them, and their Complaints brake out against Agelaus; murmuring, that they had now loft all occafions of bettering their Fortune, and enriching themselves by the Spoils of Strangers; and were become hopeless for the time to come, the Peace not being particular with some sew Towns, but with the whole Greek Nation. But their Prætor, with wife Patience, enduring their foolish Reproaches, so moderated those Heats, that they submitted to his Authority, tho' with repugnance enough.

As

As foon as the Peace was ratify'd, King Philip return'd by Sea to Macedon; where finding that Scerdilaidas, who had already feiz'd certain Vessels in the Port of Leucas, had lately plunder'd Pissaum, a Town of Pelagonia, with the same Prætext as before, of paying himself the Money that remain'd due; that he had further drawn to his Party the Towns of Daffaretis; that by Promises he had allur'd the People of Phabatis; as, namely, Antipatria, Chrysondiona, and Gertunta; and had made Inroads on the Macedonians: Philip therefore first led his Troops against the revolted Towns, with Resolution however not to delay his march against Scerdilaidas, judging it to be of great moment to compose the Asfairs of Illyria, in order to the Enterprizes he had conceiv'd, especially his Voyage into Italy. For Demetrius had so kindled his Ambition, that it became his meditation Night and Day, and was the subject of his Dreams, talking in his fleep of a War in Italy. yet these Instigations grew not from the Love he bare to Philip, whose Affairs he little confider'd, but from his Hatred to the Romans, and a Regard to his own Ends, conceiving there was now no other means left him. whereby to regain his Dominion of the Island of Pharus. In conclusion, Philip departing with his Army, recover'd the Places we mention'd, together with Creonium, and Gerunte in Dassaretis: And besides those, Enchelanæ.

belana, Cerax, Station, and Bai, near the Lake Lychnidius. Furthermore, he made himfelf Master of Bantia, in the Territory of Calicani, and Orgysum on the Frontiers of the Pisfantines : and after these Successes, march'd his Horse into Winter Quarters. It was during the same Winter that Hannibal, having spoil'd the best part of Isaly, held his Quarters in Apulia near Gerijon, at which time Lucius Æmylius, and Terentius Varro, were created Confuls at Rome.

King Philip, in the mean time, calculating, that to further the Enterprizes he was projecting, he should stand in need of a good Supply of Ships and Sea-men; not that he conceiv'd himself a Match for the Romans by Sea, but to enable him to embark and transport his Troops, where he should think it best, whereby to take the Enemy by surprize, and when they least suspected him: Wherefore, finding the Vessels of the Illyrian Fashion were properest for his use, he caus'd forthwith an hundred of that fort to be built; and was one of the first Macedonian Kings who had order'd fo great a Fleet to be provided. After he had rigg'd and equipp'd them with all things neceffary, he affembled his Troops about the beginning of Summer; and when he had exercis'd his Macedonians a while in the Use of the Oar, he put to Sea. This was about the time that Antiochus march'd over Mount Taurus.

DK

h

fo

to

t

S

b п

p

b

h

fa

tl

1

0

7

f

P

1

After Philip had pass'd down the Euripus with his Army, and doubled the Cape of Mas lea, he arriv'd near Leucas, failing by Cephallenia; when taking Harbour, he remain'd watching the Motions of the Roman Fleet, having a careful eye to every thing. But as foon as he became affur'd, that the Fleet at Lilybæum remain'd still at an Anchor, he weigh'd, and stood off to Sea, steering as if he were bound for Apollonia. But after they had pass'd the Mouth of the River Loius, (or rather Aous) which runs by the Walls of Apollonia, the Fleet was on the sudden terrify'd with a panick Fear, fuch as usually surprizes Armies by Land. It feems fome of the Vessels in the Reer, who had touch'd in a Port of a certain Island, call'd Saso, lying at the entrance of the Ionian Sea, came up in the Night with the King to let him know, That by certain Veffels that came out of the Sea of Sicily, and arriv'd at the same Port, they were assur'd, that they had left the Roman Fleet at Rhegium, and that they were making the best of their way for Apollonia, with Orders to join Scerdilaidas. Philip therefore apprehending the Roman Fleet to be at hand, took the Alarm, and in a fright flood about with his Fleet, and return'd from whence he came, his Ships, failing dispers'd, and without any order. The next Morning arriving at Cephallenia, and being recover'd from his Fear, he told his People, That certain Affairs, that imported him to negonegotiate in Peloponnesus, had made him change his Purpofe. The News however that had fo terrify'd Philip, was not entirely false : for Scerdilaidas being inform'd of Philip's great Naval Preparations during the Winter. had concluded that his Defign was to fall on him: He had therefore given advice thereof to the Romans, and pray'd Succours from them: fo that the Romans had fent him ten Vessels out of the Fleet at Lilybaum, which Squadron was feen at Rhegium as they pass'd by: And if Philip's Surprize had been less, he might have succeeded better in his Illyrian Expedition. Furthermore, it is not improbable but that the Romans themselves, who were humbled by their Loss at Canna, might have fallen into his hands: But being terrify'd at the News, he made the best of his way to Macedon: without Loss indeed, but not without Reproach.

But what Prulias did about the same time, merits to be recorded to his great Honour: Those Gauls whom Attalus had drawn out of Europe (having an extraordinary Opinion of their Bravery) to profecute the War against Achæus, having deferted his Service, for Reafons we have elsewhere noted, fell to spoil and plunder the Towns about the Hellespont, wherein they proceeded with great Violence and Cruelty; and coming to lay fiege to the Ilians, the Alexandrians, who inhabited the neighbouring Country, behav'd themselves

with

304 POLYBIUS's General History. Vol. 11:

with great Reputation on that occasion; for fending out Themistas at the head of four thousand Men, he did not only raise the Siege, but forc'd the Enemy quite out of the Trojan Territory, by cutting off their Convoys, and op-poling other ways their Deligns.

Afterwards the Gauls, having taken Arisba. a Town of the Abydenians, attempted other Places of that Country, vexing them with continual Hostilities. Wherefore Prufias march'd at the head of an Army to attack them; and giving them Battel, gain'd a memorable Victory, where they were all cut off, their Wives and Children only escaping to The Spoil he gave to his victo. their Camp. rious Soldiers, and by that Success deliver'd the Peloponnefians from their Fears, and the great Danger that threatned them; and in-Regided those Barbarians by that Example, to be cautious for the future how they adventur'd out of Europe into Afia. The Affairs of Greece and Afia then were in the posture we have related. As to Italy, after the Battel of Canna, the People, both of the Towns and Country, for the most part, gave themselves up to Hannibal, as we have already observ'd.

But having now fummarily recorded the Occurrences of the Hundred and Fortieth Olympiad, we will here give a period to that History; and after we shall have made a short Recital in the follow Book, of what bath been deliver'd in this, we purpose to treat about the Form of the Roman Commonwealth.

Finis Liber V.